POWELL, ATHERTON FFOLLIOT, Major, was born 6 Jan. 1858, son of the late Capt. Thomas Ffolliot Powell, formerly of the 16th Lancers, and H.M.'s Commissioner of Prisons for Scotland. He was educated at Cheltenham, and joined the Royal Artillery as Lieutenant 31 Jan. 1878, and served in the Sudan, 1885–86, with the Frontier Field Force (Despatches, Medal and clasp, Bronze Star). He became Captain 21 July, 1886, and Major 29 Aug. 1896. In 1897–98 he took part in the operations on the North-West Frontier of India, with the Tirah Expeditionary Force, taking part in the action of Dargai. Operations on the Samana Range and in the Kurram Valley (Medal with three clasps). Major Powell served in the South African War, 1899–1902 (on Special Service with the Rhodesian Field Force, 6 April, 1900, to 30 Sept. 1901); and was present at operations in the Transvaal and Cape Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902; operations in Orange River Colony, May and June, 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Atherton Ffolliot Powell, Major, Royal Garrison Artillery. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to Lord Kitchener, and presented by Lieut.-Colonel Vyvyan at Vryberg. He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 2 Nov. 1904; commanded the Heavy Brigade at Plymouth, 1906–10; was given the Brevet of Colonel 2 Nov. 1907, and retired with the rank of Colonel 4 Dec. 1909. Colonel Powell rejoined the Army for temporary service 7 Oct. 1914, and became Commandant, Siege Training Centre, Deepcut. He married, in 1909, Alice, daughter of Major S. H. Powell, of Park Hill, King's Lynn, and they have one son and one daughter.

WHITE, FREDERICK, Major, was born 14 Oct. 1861, son of the late Major George White, R.M.L.I. He joined the Royal Marine Light Infantry 1 Feb. 1879, and served in the Egyptian Expedition of 1882–84, taking part in the bombardment of Alexandria, occupation of the Lines of the town, occupation of Port Said (Medal with clasp; Bronze Star). He again saw active service in the Sudan in 1884, was present at the battles of El Teb and Tamai, and the relief of Tokar (two clasps; 5th Class Medjidie). He was promoted to Captain 26 Aug. 1888; to Major 6 Sept. 1896; was on the Staff, Royal Marines, 29 June, 1896, to 12 Feb. 1899. Major White served in the South African War 3 Feb. 1900, to 13 April, 1902, as Special Service Officer, including service as D.A.A.G., Headquarters, Cape Town; Railway Staff Officer, Sterkstroom; Commandant, Bethulie Bridges, and District command under the Military Governor, Orange River Colony. He was present at operations in Orange River Colony, including the action at Wittebergen; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and for the defence of Ladybrand was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Frederick White, Major, Royal Marine Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Major White's defence of Ladybrand is described by Sir A. Conan Doyle in his "Great Boer War" (pages 377 and 378): "On September 2 another commando of Free State Boers under Fourie emerged from the mountain country on the Basuto border, and fell upon Ladybrand, which was held by a feeble garrison consisting of one company of the Worcester regiment and forty-three men of the Wiltshire Yeomanry. The Boers, who had several guns with them, appear to have been the same force which had been repulsed at Winburg. Major White, a gallant marine, whose fighting qualities do not seem to have deteriorated with his distance from salt water, had arranged his defences upon a hill, after the Wepener model, and held his own most stoutly. So great was the disparity of the forces that for days acute anxiety was felt lest another of those humiliating surrenders should interrupt the record of victories, and encourage the Boers to further resistance. The point was distant, and it was some time before relief could reach them. But the dusky chiefs, who from their native mountains looked down on the military drama which was played so close to their frontier, were again, as on the Jammersberg, to see the Boer attack beaten back by the constancy of the British defence. The thin line of soldiers, 150 of them covering a mile and a half of ground, endured a heavy shell and rifle fire with unshaken resolution, repulsed every attempt of the burghers, and held the flag flying until relieved by the forces under White and Bruce Hamilton." He became Lieutenant-Colonel 11 April, 1903; was given the Brevet of Colonel 11 April, 1906, and retired with the rank of Colonel 11 April, 1909. Colonel White was Draft Conducting Officer from 1915 to 1919 (three Medals).

SCOTT-KERR, ROBERT, Major, was born 8 Nov. 1859, eldest son of the late William Scott-Kerr, of Sunlaws and Chatto, and of his second wife, Frances Louisa, daughter of Robert Fennessy. He was gazetted to the 24th Foot 26 March, 1879, and became Second Lieutenant, Grenadier Guards, 26 Nov. 1879; served in the Zulu Campaign of 1879, and was present at the Battle of Ulundi (Medal with clasp). He became Lieutenant 1 July, 1881, and served in the Sudan Expedition of 1885 (Suakin), receiving the Medal with clasp and the Bronze Star. He was promoted to Captain 16 Dec. 1890, and to Major 19 Sept. 1896. Major Scott-Kerr served in the South African War, 1900–2, and was present in operations in the Orange River Colony, April to May, 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Biddulphsberg and Wittebergen (1 to 29 July); operations in the Transvaal, Feb. to March, 1901. operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, to Feb. 1901, and March, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901], received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Robert Scott-Kerr, Major, Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to Lord Kitchener in South Africa, and were presented by Brigadier-General E. O. F. Hamilton at Heilbron 12 March, 1902. He became Lieutenant-Colonel 14 Feb. 1904; was given the Brevet of Colonel 14 Feb. 1907; became Colonel 7 Nov. 1908. Colonel Scott-Kerr commanded the Grenadier Guards and Regimental District 30 July, 1910, to 29 July, 1914. At the beginning of the war (from 5 Aug. 1914), he commanded the 4th (Guards') Brigade, B.E.F., and he was severely wounded during the Retreat from Mons. Lord Ernest Hamilton, in "The First Seven Divisions" (published by Messrs. Hutchinson), says on pages 76 and 77 that at Villers-Cotterêts "we were again forced into a rearguard action. At nine o'clock the 4th (Guards') Brigade, which was acting rearguard, was overtaken at Soucy, where—in accordance with orders—it had faced about while the 2nd Division was having a two hours' halt for rest and dinner. It was no case of surprise, the brigade being thoroughly prepared, and, indeed, expecting to have to hold the enemy in check. Dispositions were therefore made accordingly. The 2nd Granadiers and 3rd Coldstream held the ground from Montgobert to Soucy, with the Coldstream lining the long grass ride that runs through the woods at Haramont. They were supported by two batteries of the 41st Brigade, R.F.A. The 2nd Coldstream and Irish Guards were posted in rear of the first line along the northern edge of the Forêt de Villers-Cotterêts, at the base of the ridge known as the Rond de la Reine. The enemy commenced by shelling the front line, and shelling it with such accuracy that General Scott-Kerr ordered the Grenadiers and 3rd Coldstream to fall back through the second line, and take up a position in rear. This was done, but subsequently these two battalions were brought up into line with the Irish Guards along the northern edge of the wood, whilst the 2nd Coldstream were sent back to take up a covering position in rear of the wood, along the railway east and west of Villers-Cotterêts Halte. Such was the position without much change up to midday, when the enemy's attack began to slacken, and shortly afterwards they appeared to have had enough of it, and drew off. The 4th Brigade thereupon resumed its march as far as Thury, which was reached about 10.30 p.m. Their casualties in this action amounted to over 300. The Irish Guards in this action had Colonel the Honourable G. Morris and Lieut. Tisdall killed; Major Crichton and Lord Castlerosse wounded. In the Grenadiers the Hon. J. Manners and Lieut. McDougall were killed, and in the Coldstream, Lieut. G. Lambton was killed and Capt. Burton and Capt. Tritton wounded. The Brigadier-General Scott-Kerr was himself badly wounded in the thigh, and the command of the brigade was taken over by Colonel Corry." Brigadier-General Scott-Kerr commanded a brigade, Central Force, Home Defence, from 2 Jan. 1915, to 26 March, 1915; he was commander (graded A.A.G.), 10th and 11th Divisions, New Armies, 15 Oct. 1915, to 7 Dec. 1915; and Brigade Commander, 191st Infantry Brigade, Home Forces, 8 Dec. 1915, to 14 Jan. 1918. He was created a C.B. in 1914, and a C.M.G. in 1919; was mentioned in Despatches twice, and has the Mons Star.

He was created a C.M.G., 1915; awarded the Order of St. Stanislaus, 3rd Class, with Swords, Aug. 1915; promoted Brevet Colonel, Jan. 1917; created a C.B. Jan., 1918; appointed Temporary Major-General commanding 32nd Division, April, 1918; transferred to command 31st Division, May, 1918, to March, 1919. Mentioned in Despatches seven times; Commandeur de l'Ordre de la Couronne and Croix de Guerre (Belgian), March, 1919; appointed Temporary Brigadier-General commanding 1st Highland Brigade in Germany, March, 1919, to 31 Oct. 1919; appointed Brigadier-General commanding 11th Infantry Brigade 1 Nov. 1919; promoted Colonel, June, 1919; Commandeur de la Légion d'Honneur, Oct. 1919. Colonel Campbell married, in 1901, Amy Leighton, third daughter of the Rev. Canon Hopkins.

HAYDEN, FREDERICK ARTHUR, Major, was born at Helmdon, Northamptonshire, on 10 Aug. 1861, son of the Rev. C. F. Hayden, late Scholar and Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. He was educated at Winchester College, and entered the Army 22 Jan. 1881. He was promoted Captain, 1888, and Major, 1898. Major Hayden took part in the South African War, 1900–1902; as Acting Commandant, Simon's Town, 25 Aug. to 9 Oct. 1900; during operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1900. He served as Adjutant, 3rd Battn. West Riding Regt. 1 Jan. to 10 May, 1902; during operations in Cape Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901], awarded the Queen's Medal with clasp, King's Medal with two clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Frederick Arthur Hayden, Major, West Riding Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 18 Dec. 1902; the Warrant sent 14 Jan. 1903. He was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, Duke of Wellington's Regt., 2 Feb. 1908, and retired on full pay, 1912. When the European War broke out he was called out for service and was employed with the New Armies; served in France, 1915–19, in command of the 9th Battn. Duke of Wellington's Regt., and has been mentioned twice in Despatches, and given the O.B.E. He married, at Murree, India, 17 Sept. 1885, Henrietta Grace Lambert, daughter of Colonel Anthony Stewart (Bengal Staff Corps), of Ardvorlich.

MAUDE, FREDERICK STANLEY, Major, was born 24 June, 1864, youngest son of General Sir Frederick Francis Maude, V.C., G.C.B., and Lady Maude. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the Coldstream Guards in Feb. 1884. He served in the Sudan; was present at the actions of Hasheen and Tamai (1885), receiving the Medal and clasp and the Khedive's Star. Lieut. Maude was appointed Adjutant, 1st Battn. The Coldstream Guards, in 1888, and held this appointment until 1892. He was promoted to Captain in 1891; passed the Staff College in 1896; became Major in 1899. The following notes are supplied by Colonel Sir James Magill, K.C.B.: "At the outbreak of the South African War, Major Maude was Brigade Major, Brigade of Guards, in the Home District, so he was unable to accompany the troops first sent out. Resigning his post in London, he speedily followed, and on the 12th of Feb. 1900, joined the Staff of Major-General Pole-Carew, as Brigade Major, Guards Brigade, then encamped at Modder River. A few days subsequently, as he was observing the Boer position at Magersfontein, he came to the conclusion that the enemy had retired, and this proved to be correct. Marching from Modder River, the Guards Brigade arrived at Klip Drift on 19 Feb. The possession of the Drift was a most important item in the scheme of attack which Lord Roberts was planning against the Boer forces under General Cronje, who had taken up a position at Paardeberg, some 20 miles distant. After an obstinate defence General Cronje surrendered on the 27th Feb. and next day some 4,000 prisoners passed through the lines of the Guards Brigade, en route for Cape Town. On the 7th of March the action of Poplar Grove was fought, and on the 10th that of Dreifontein, this latter by the 6th Division. To complete the success of the day, an advance of the Guards was ordered (but eventually countermanded). While making the necessary dispositions Major Maude met with a severe accident. His horse fell and crushed him badly, injuring his right shoulder. Though he was only a few days absent from duty the injury proved very grave, and lasting in its effects, and he never fully recovered the use of his right arm. Bloemfontein, the capital of the Free State, was occupied on 13 March, and two days later a flying column under Major-General Pole-Carew left to open up the railway communications to the south. During the halt at Bloemfontein the 11th Division was formed. It was composed of the Guards and the 18th Brigade, and was under the command of Major-General Pole-Carew, while Major Maude continued as Brigade Major to the Guards Brigade, under Major-General Inigo Jones. It was not until 1 May that the march on Pretoria was resumed. Kroonstad was reached on 5 May, Johannesburg was occupied on the 31st, and on 5 June the troops entered Pretoria, and Major Maude, with one company of the 2nd Battn. Coldstream Guards, took formal possession of various official buildings. The Union Jack was hoisted in the Market Square, and that afternoon the troops were marched past Lord Roberts, the Guards Brigade leading. A week later, negotiations for peace having broken down, Lord Roberts attacked the Boers at Diamond Hill. Continuing the advance, Belfast was reached on 25 Aug. Here Lord Roberts's force met that under Sir Redvers Buller coming up from Natal, and both were heavily engaged that day and the succeeding. From Belfast the 11th Division marched, and reached Nooitgedacht on the 31st inst. This was the principal camp of the British prisoners of war. The enemy still retiring, the Guards Brigade pushed on, and eventually arrived at Koomati Poort, the extreme limit of the Transvaal Territory, on 24 Sept. After a brief stay the Guards entrained for Pretoria, and the 11th Division having been broken up, Major-General Inigo Jones's Brigade proceeded to Bloemfontein, and thence to guard the Drifts on the Orange River, a movement rendered necessary by the enemy having sent sundry raiding parties into Cape Town. The headquarters of the Guards was established at Naaupoort Junction on 24 Dec., and here Major Maude remained until his departure from South Africa on the 9th March, 1901, to take up another appointment. While at Naaupoort, his work was mainly concerned with Staff duties connected with the various mobile columns and small garrisons which the changed features of the campaign had rendered necessary. From his arrival in South Africa till his departure, he carried out the lesson of his favourite motto, 'with both hands earnestly.'" The official record of his service is: "South African War, 1899–1901, including advance on Kimberley, operations in the Orange Free State, actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Karee Siding, Vet River and Zand River; and operations in the Transvaal, actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria, Diamond Hill and Belfast; operations in Cape Colony." Major Maude was mentioned in Despatches, received the Queen's Medal with six clasps and—for general gallantry during the campaign, when acting as Brigade Major—was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Frederick Stanley Maude, Major, Coldstream Guards. For services in South Africa." The Insignia were presented in Canada by the Earl of Minto. In May, 1901, Major Maude had gone out to Canada as Lord Minto's Military Secretary, and he held this appointment until 1904. He made all the arrangements for the Royal Tour in Canada in Sept. and Oct. 1901, and was awarded a Companionship of St. Michael and St. George. The Insignia of the Order were presented to him by the Duke of York at Ottawa in Sept. 1901. He became Private Secretary to the Secretary of State for War in 1905; was Chief Staff Officer, Coast Defences, Plymouth, from 1906 to 1908, and D.A.A. and Q.M.G., General Staff, 2nd London Division, Territorial Force, under Sir Henry Mackinnon, from 1908 to 1909; Assistant Director, Territorial Force, 1909–12. His work in the Military Training Directorate in connection with the Territorial Force was most valuable. He became Lieutenant-Colonel in 1907; Colonel in 1911, and was Chief Staff Officer, 5th Division, at the Curragh, from 1912 to 1914. He was at the War Office, in the Military Training Branch, under Sir William Robertson, from Jan. 1914, until the outbreak of the European War, when he was appointed to the Staff of the 3rd Corps, under General Pulteney, and proceeded to France. Colonel Maude was promoted to Brigadier-General in Oct. 1914, and was given command of the 14th Infantry Brigade. He took an active part in the fighting in Flanders, under General Sir Charles Fergusson, and was present at Hill 60. He was created C.B. in Feb. 1915. In April, 1915, he was severely wounded, spending three weeks in Lady Ridley's Hospital in London, when he returned to his Brigade in France. He became Major-General in June, and assumed command of the 33rd Infantry Division in England, but had hardly settled down to his new duties when, in Aug. 1915, he was sent at a few hours' notice to the Dardanelles. Maude arrived at the Dardanelles on the 23rd Aug.; interviewed Sir Ian Hamilton on that date, and was given command of the 13th Division, which had seen some very hard fighting. In Dec. a few days after the evacuation at Suvla Bay had been successfully accomplished, Maude was sent with his Division to assist at the evacuation of the Helles area, and he had to carry out the disembarkation from Gully Beach. A sudden storm made Gully Beach impracticable, the sea was rising fast, and Maude had to trek down to "W" Beach, to see if he and his men could not manage to get away from there. The situation was intensely critical. At any moment the Turks might have awakened to the fact that the British Army was stealing away, and that the rearguard were at their mercy. Here Maude was at his best; all ranks testify to his conduct and to the nerve and example by which he kept everyone cool and steady. Nothing would induce him to part with a huge valise he was carrying; he was about the last man to embark, and the higher command became very anxious about him. After the event an amusing parody was written, beginning "Come into the lighter, Maude," and went the rounds of the Expeditionary Force, amongst whom Maude's reluctance to leave enemy soil was well known. For he had always held that an allowance of drafts and munitions on the Western scale would have given us the Peninsula, thereby enabling our fleet to get through the Straits to Constantinople. The 13th Division went to Egypt from the Dardanelles, and subsequently to Mesopotamia. In June, 1916, Major-General Maude was created a K.C.B., and the award was gazetted on the 23rd Dec. 1916. In July, 1916, he was given command of the Tigris Corps, with the rank of Temporary Lieutenant-General, and in Aug. he was appointed Commander-in-Chief to the whole Expeditionary Force. He at once recognized that his first task was to reorganize his Army and improve his line of communications, which he proceeded to do, and did it so thoroughly and well that it was possible to resume operations in Dec. The following is a typical letter from Sir Stanley Maude to an old Army colleague, showing the simple, straightforward nature of the General, and his ingrained modesty:

"General Headquarters,
"Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force,
"January 22nd, 1917.

"MY DEAR ——,

"Many thanks for your letter, dated the 8th July, and for all the good wishes that it contains. I can assure you that I appreciate them very greatly, more especially so, coming as they do from one whom I have had the honour of serving under in the field. I cannot help feeling, however, that you rate any service that I may have rendered too highly, for I think that any measure of success I may have gained during the war has been due almost entirely to those men I have had the good fortune to command. . . . We have had a very strenuous time out here. Our long line of communications by water with, at first, inadequate river craft, the absence of roads and railways, the lack of water, except at the rivers, the great shortage of local supplies, and the long time which it necessarily takes for our stores and supplies to reach us, all make it an intensely complicated problem. But it is, at the same time, an absorbingly interesting one, and I live every minute of it. When I first took over command I devoted three months to organization and developing our resources, and, that done, I moved my headquarters up to the front. In the middle of December, having accumulated a sufficiency of supplies, we were well forward to warrant a movement. Everyone is cheery and in good spirits, and the men get good food and plenty of it. The transport and supply arrangements are working magnificently, and with everyone pulling together like one man, we are bound to make progress. In fact, it is indeed a privilege to command forces full of such willing, obedient, and gallant soldiers. Will you please forgive these hurried lines, but I am very busy? My kind regards, and with every good wish for 1917 to you both,

"Yours sincerely,
"F. S. MAUDE."

Sir Stanley Maude was promoted to Lieutenant-General after the recapture of Kut in Feb. 1917. He was seven times mentioned in Despatches during the European War. It is unnecessary to describe here his victorious campaign in Mesopotamia, as extracts are given below from the writings of his friends and from the speeches of Mr. Lloyd George, Lord Curzon and Mr. McKenna. In the hour of his triumph General Maude was smitten down by a sudden illness, and died on 18 Nov. 1917, to the grief and consternation of the whole Empire. His Majesty the King at once sent a message to the General Officer commanding the forces in Mesopotamia, expressing his sorrow and sympathy. Sir Stanley Maude was buried at Baghdad on 19 Nov.

It was written at the time:

"Sometimes by a soldier's grave the near presence of Death is brought home to the mourners by the thud of bullets and the sound of bursting shell; sometimes it is possible for the burial to be accompanied and its impressiveness enhanced by such music and ceremony as befit the occasion. To-day we stood beyond the sound of the enemy guns; but though no drum beat and no funeral note sounded, though no gun-carriage bore the coffin, though the mind was not stirred by that most touching of all symbols, the charger carrying the empty saddle, yet the greatness of the man and the honour in which all held him lent more dignity and weight to the ceremony than could any outside suggestion have given. And this scene by the bare desert, engraved on the mind of every mourner—and none were present but those who had served and loved him—an impression so deep and lasting as can never be effaced nor ever put into words. Officers from nearly every brigade in Mesopotamia were present, and all his Staff, and among the khaki soldiers stood a group of seamen; yet the figures who seemed most in keeping with the ceremony and most in touch with the General's spirit were the few private soldiers of his old division, who stood as the procession slowly passed, silent and motionless, each leaning over his rifle with bowed head. . . .

"Lieut.-General S. Maude was a typical example of the corps of officers of the Old Army. Tall, courteous, firm and thoroughly acquainted with the profession of arms, he was always popular and always successful. His bright spirit could never brook pessimism of any kind, and his invincible cheerfulness and fine character were worth a King's ransom on service. He never thought of himself, but only of his troops and the cause, and his letters were full of admiration for the men he commanded. They breathe a noble spirit, while the record of his deeds upon the great rivers speaks for itself."

A brother General says of General Maude: "His successes were among the most brilliant of the war, and in Mesopotamia he reaped the laurels that will go down the ages. The modern type of General, planning campaigns to scale, says, 'On the 20th of next month, at 3.3 a.m.,' a certain thing will happen—and it possibly may. Maude was a real General, a fighting General in the old Napoleonic sense. He was always ready for the unexpected, and could always grapple with the unforeseen. I have never known him in a difficulty he could not get out of by sheer resource and audacity. This is not saying he was irresponsible and reckless. If necessary he could bide his time; but he always believed in giving the enemy no rest, and his almost invariable plan—it worked, too—was to force the fighting. Like all leaders, he was a good judge of men, and had a quick, keen eye for favourable position in the terrain of campaign. As a personality he was a simple, kindly man, straight as a die and honest as the day. His men were always devoted to him, and they had good reason, for the welfare of those who fought under him was always a guiding thought with him. He could not be happy and comfortable if his soldiers were miserable and uncomfortable. He himself has earned the title of the good soldier in this world and the next."

Mr. Lloyd George moved in the House of Commons that a sum not exceeding £25,000 should be granted to Lady Maude, in recognition of the eminent services rendered by the late Lieut.-General Sir Frederick Stanley Maude, K.C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., while commanding His Majesty's Forces during the late campaign in Mesopotamia. He said: "The services which Sir Stanley Maude rendered to the Empire, notably in Mesopotamia, were distinguished, far-reaching and permanent in their effects. He found British prestige at a very low ebb in a quarter of the globe where prestige counts for much. The British Army in the East had suffered a series of severe reverses. One great enterprise on which a good deal of the strength of the Empire had been concentrated had to be abandoned. One British Army had surrendered to the Turkish forces, after another British Army had been defeated in an attempt to relieve it. In Egypt we had a large force sheltering behind the desert and the canal from an inferior Turkish Army. This tale of discomfiture and humiliation spread throughout every bazaar in the East, and, like a tree, grew as it spread. Before it ran into irreparable mischief for the Empire, the genius of Sir Stanley Maude had changed and restored the position. I know well how much of this success was due to the reorganization of the transport service by Sir John Cowans and his able Staff, the reorganization of the Medical Service by Sir Alfred Keogh and his assistants, and the reinforcements brought in by Sir William Robertson and Sir Charles Munro. But the enemy also had time to reinforce and to strengthen his forces. The ground lent itself to entrenchments. These entrenchments were constructed under the advice and direction of German engineers. The Turk was fighting his best in a climate which suited him and did not suit us. But against all these obstacles the leadership of Sir Stanley Maude and the valour of his Army triumphed. The highest proof of generalship is not so much in the winning of a victory as in its exploitation. No General ever made better or wiser use of his victory than did Sir Stanley Maude. The relentless pursuit of the defeated Army, which ultimately destroyed it, and ended in the dramatic capture of Baghdad, sounded throughout the East. These were amongst the finest feats in military history, and they had a magical effect on the fame and position of Britain throughout the whole of the East. The Germans realized it. Sir Stanley Maude's achievements had destroyed their cherished dream. They sent one of their ablest Generals there to effect a reconquest, and I do not think that it is too much to say that their abandonment of that enterprise was due very largely to their appreciation of the fact, when they came there, that they were confronted by a leader of exceptional resource and power. But Sir Stanley Maude's real greatness was displayed in the use which he made of the victory after it had been obtained. He showed as much wisdom as an administrator as he displayed skill as a General. Every great General has a strain of statesmanship, and Sir Stanley Maude exhibited great gifts of statesmanship in his administration of that difficult country. Whilst ruling with a firm hand, he won the esteem and affection of that gifted but suspicious race, not merely by the equity of his rule, but by the intelligent sympathy which he displayed. He possessed that rare tact which is a blend of gentleness and understanding, and the article that appeared in an Arab paper after his death, and which was, I think, reproduced in the British Press last week, is the highest tribute that could have been paid to his great qualities as a Governor and a man. He died a victim of the inbred courtesy of his fine character. I heard a story from a member of his Staff the other day. Sir Stanley Maude visited a plague-stricken area at the invitation of the inhabitants. They were anxious to extend him a welcome for the many kindnesses which he had displayed. They gave him a great one, and they offered him a small hospitality. Though he so well knew the peril that he had actually forbidden any soldier in his escort to eat or drink while on that visit, he himself ran the risk rather than hurt the susceptibilities of a people anxious to give him a welcome. There was poison in the cup, and he died within a few days. Sir Stanley Maude will always be remembered as one of the great figures of this war, not merely for what he achieved, but for what he was. I know not what destiny may have in store for the famed land which he conquered, but of two things I am certain. The first is that the whole course of its history will be changed for the better as a result of the victory and the rule of Sir Stanley Maude; and the second is that his name will always be cherished by the inhabitants of that land as that of the gentlest conqueror who ever entered the Gates of Baghdad."

Mr. McKenna said, in seconding the motion moved by the Prime Minister: "Sir Stanley Maude's great services are so recent that they live fresh in the memory of each of us. He found a situation full of anxiety and even of peril, and he converted it into a triumph of organization and of military achievement. He died in the full tide of victory and glory."

Lord Curzon said in the House of Lords: "The late General Maude was a man who was destined, not merely by birth but by natural inspiration, to a soldier's career. The son of an eminent General, who himself won the Victoria Cross, an Eton boy, a Guardsman, he had served in many capacities in this country and abroad, in Canada, in South Africa, in Egypt, and at the War Office, before his opportunity came. War is a great leveller of distinction, but it is also a supreme discoverer of merit; and it is not too much to say that General Maude was one of the discoveries, although to none of his friends was he one of the surprises, of the present war. At the beginning of the war he was only a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1914 he was given a brigade and went to France. He took part in the Battle of Mons, and was wounded in the retreat upon Paris. In 1915 he was sent in command of a division to the Dardanelles, and there, in command of his force—known locally, I believe, as the 'Iron Legion'—he shared, not merely in the perils and privations, but also in the glories of that momentous and fateful campaign. He was indeed almost the last British officer to leave the Peninsula when evacuation took place. And I have also been told that had the Turkish forces shown anything like the alertness which might have been expected, they might have materially altered the course of future events and themselves captured on the beaches the future conqueror of Baghdad. In 1916 General Maude was sent with his division to Mesopotamia, and there he took part in the arduous operations that were then in course of being carried out for the relief of the beleaguered garrison of Kut. As your Lordships will remember, that place fell after an heroic defence by General Townshend and his brave men; and in August of that year General Maude succeeded Sir Percy Lake as Commander-in-Chief of the British Expeditionary Force in Mesopotamia. It was a dark moment in the history of the war; it was a critical moment in the fortunes of Great Britain in the East. The issues of the conflict themselves trembled in the balance, and the prestige of the British Empire may be described not unfairly as having been at stake. General Maude had to deal with an enemy flushed with victory, entrenched in a position of exceptional strength, provided with all the scientific military resources which he had received from his European ally. The advance upon Baghdad in the month of December, 1916, the dramatic crossing of the Tigris, the forced evacuation of Kut by the Turks, the disorderly retreat of the flying enemy upon Baghdad, the rapid pursuit by General Maude and his men, constituted a military achievement of no mean order. But General Maude was by no means content with his initial victory; he was not the kind of man to rest upon his laurels. Following the Turks with great speed up the Dialah River in one direction, up the Tigris in another, and, at a later date, up the waters of the Euphrates, he inflicted upon them a series of crushing defeats, which rendered them incapable of any further sustained military effort. He lifted the danger which overhung the Persian border, and which might, unless arrested, have reacted through Persia upon Afghanistan, and upon India itself, and he occupied the whole of the Baghdad villayet. And be it remembered that he carried out the series of operations which I have described, labouring under a sense of bitter disappointment at the failure of our Russian Allies, who were at that time in the north-western part of Persia, to extend to him the support which he had reason to expect. The last few months of General Maude's life were devoted to the task of organizing and administering the territories which he had won; and there, in November, 1917, in an act of unthinking courtesy, he contracted that fatal pestilence which always broods behind the atmosphere of the East, and in a few hours passed away. Thus, in a few months of time, it was given to General Maude to achieve what many military commanders do not attain in a lifetime. He retrieved a great disaster; he won a resounding victory; he recovered a province—almost a country—once one of the gardens of the East, which had mouldered for centuries under the blight of Turkish misrule. Nay, more. By a single stroke or series of strokes, he may be said to have altered the history of the world. It is surely inconceivable that the inhabitants of those fair regions can ever be thrust back into the servitude from which General Maude and his forces succeeded in emancipating them. And then, in the hour of his triumph, the General was stricken down, not indeed on the battlefield, but, as I have pointed out, by a death not less honourable and infinitely more pathetic. My Lords, if we turn from the contemplation of the soldier to that of the man, there is a consensus of opinion among those who knew General Maude well—of whom, unfortunately, I was not one—that not merely did he possess the genius of a military commander, but that he had many of those qualities of personal character which endeared him to all those with whom he was associated. The soul of chivalry, he was not less strict in the discipline that he applied to himself than he was in that which he applied to others. A non-smoker, almost a total abstainer, he set an example of conscientious abnegation and self-control which profoundly affected the conduct of those who served under him. At the same time, he was kind and thoughtful to a degree of his soldiers, and, as abundant testimony confirms, he was exceptionally considerate to the native inhabitants of the countries that had passed under his sway. Thus I think we may say of the departed General that in manifold respects he fulfilled the ideal of the Happy Warrior which was drawn for us in such moving terms by one of the greatest of our poets more than a century ago."

In 1893, Sir Stanley Maude married Cecil Cornelia Marianne St. Leger, daughter of the late Colonel the Right Honourable Thomas Edward Taylor, M.P., of Ardgillan Castle, County Dublin, and their children are: Edward Frederick (Lieutenant, Royal Horse Artillery); Stella Cecil and Beryl Mary.

YALE, JAMES CORBET, Major, was born 1 March, 1859, eldest surviving son of the late W. C. Corbet Yale Jones-Parry. He was educated at Marlborough; entered the Army 13 Aug. 1879; was promoted Captain, 1888. He was promoted Major, 1899, and served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Commandant, Frederikstad, from 13 Sept. 1901, taking part in the operations in Natal, 1899; was present at the Relief of Ladysmith, including action at Colenso; during operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900, and action at Spion Kop; operations of 5 to 7 Feb. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; took part in the operations on Tugela Heights 14 to 27 Feb. 1900, and actions at Pieter's Hill; during operations in Natal, March and April, 1900; serving during operations in the Transvaal, April, 1901, to May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; awarded the Queen's and King's Medals and five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "James Corbet Yale, Major, West Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to Major Yale's private address

1 Aug. 1902. At the end of the South African War, Major Yale was appointed in command 1st Battn. P.W.O. West Yorkshire Regt., 1902–6. He retired from the Army with the rank of Colonel. He married, in 1896, Violette, second daughter of C. L. Halbot, of Bradford, and they have four sons and two daughters.

DOBELL, CHARLES MACPHERSON, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born 22 June, 1869, son of Richard R. Dobell, of Beauvoir Manor, Quebec. He entered the Army 20 Aug. 1890; served in the Hazara Expedition, 1891 (Medal with clasp); became Lieutenant 13 July, 1892; was Adjutant, Royal Welsh Fusiliers, 7 July, 1896, to 6 Nov. 1900; took part in operations in Crete, 1897–98 (Brevet of Major 8 March, 1899); became Captain 22 Feb. 1899. He served in the South African War, 1899–1900, in command of a regiment of Mounted Infantry (22 Feb. to 13 July, 1900); Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.), actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (3 and 4 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in Orange River Colony, May to 15 July, 1900, including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 13 July). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept., 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Charles Macpherson Dobell, Capt. and Brevet Major, Royal Welsh Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the G.O.C. troops in Hong-Kong, and presented by him on 17 March, 1902. He served in China in 1900 (Medal), and West Africa (Northern Nigeria) in 1906; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 18 Sept. 1906, and 2 July, 1907]; was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel (29 Sept. 1907), and received the Medal and clasp. He was promoted to Major 28 Sept. 1907. He was G.S.O.3, H.Q. of Army, 1 April, 1907, to 1 Feb. 1909; was promoted to Lieut.-Colonel, Bedfordshire Regt., 4 May, 1912; was G.S.O.2, H.Q. of Army, 2 Feb. 1909, to 31 March, 1911; was Military A.D.C. to the King 4 Nov. 1910, to 2 June, 1915; was given the Brevet of Colonel 4 Nov. 1910; became Colonel 1 Sept. 1913; was Temporary Brigadier-General and Inspector-General, West African Frontier Force, 1 Sept. 1913, to 22 April, 1916, during which time he commanded the Allied Forces in the Cameroons, having been promoted to Major-General 3 June, 1915. General Dobell commanded the Western Frontier Force, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, 9 June to 18 Sept. 1916; was Temporary Lieut.-General 19 Sept. 1916, to 21 April, 1917, commanding No. 3 Section, Canal Defences, Egyptian Expeditionary Force (19 Sept. to 22 Oct. 1916), and commanding Eastern Frontier Force, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, 23 Oct. 1916, to 1 May, 1917. He was Divisional Commander, India, from 6 Aug. 1917. He was created a C.M.G. in 1914, and a K.C.B. in 1916. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society.

The following is an extract from General Dobell's Despatch, dated

"War Office, 31st May, 1916.

"The following Despatch has been received by the Secretary of State for War from Major-General Sir Charles M. Dobell, K.C.B., Commanding the Allied Forces in the Cameroons:—

"General Headquarters,
"Cameroons, 1st March, 1916.

"My Lord,

"I have the honour to forward herewith a summary of the operations carried out by the Allied force under my command, covering the period between the capitulation of Duala, 27th September, 1914, and the termination of active operations.

"I have, in this despatch, endeavoured to maintain a correct perspective, remembering that our operations in this theatre of war are incomparable in magnitude to those taking place elsewhere. For purposes of comparison I may, however, add that the number of troops of both nations at my immediate disposal at the commencement of the campaign amounted to 4,300 West African native soldiers; on the 21st November, 1915, this number had been increased to 9,700, including Indian troops. In these numbers the British and French forces were approximately equal.

"As Your Lordship is aware, I have kept the proper authorities informed in some detail as to the proceedings and progress of the troops under my command. These despatches I have endeavoured to forward at intervals of about a fortnight; I do not, therefore, propose to enlarge on such questions as the organization and preparation of the force placed at my disposal, nor the naval measures that were taken in a campaign to which the adjective 'amphibious' may be applied in its widest sense. It is perhaps sufficient to state I fully realized, that the conquest of a country which is some 306,000 square miles in area, or roughly one and a half times the size of the German Empire, defended by a well-led and well-trained native force, plentifully supplied with machine guns, was no light task.

"2. On my passage from the United Kingdom early in September, 1914, I learnt at various ports of call that the operations which had taken place on the Nigerian frontier had not been as successful as had been anticipated, thus confirming my opinion that Duala, the capital and chief port of the Cameroons, must be made my immediate objective. I entertained no doubts as to the ability of the Royal Navy to overcome the difficulties and make a landing at Duala feasible, and my best hopes were realized when I was informed that H.M.S. Challenger could force a passage through the sunken wrecks and other obstructions in the Cameroon River, and reach a point 7,000 yards from the town. This was made possible owing to the mine sweeping and other preparatory work which had been carried out by the Royal Navy and Nigeria Marine, under the direction of Captain Fuller, R.N., H.M.S. Cumberland.

"On my summons for the surrender of the Colony being refused, and after duly notifying the German Commandant of my intention, I ordered a bombardment of the town to commence early on 26th September; this in combination with a land demonstration, made by way of one of the neighbouring creeks, was sufficient to induce the Commandant, on 27th September, to surrender the towns of Duala and Bonaberi, with a small strip of land in their environs. The surrender of Duala secured us a safe and convenient base for the future absorption of German territory; further, the capture of stores, supplies, field guns, and the removal of over 400 German Europeans was a great loss to the German Field Force, whilst the seizure of the large amount of shipping and numerous small craft in the harbour was an inestimable advantage to us.

"3. My first object was to consolidate the position already won, and with this object in view an Allied force was allotted the task of clearing the country up to and including the Japoma Bridge, Midland Railway, whilst a British force commenced to make headway towards Maka on the Northern Railway line. Reconnaissances by land and water were carried out with uniformly successful results. I may remark incidentally that neither the climate nor the character of the country favoured the offensive: officers and men were exposed to the most trying conditions; incessant tropical rains, absence of roads or even paths, a country covered with the densest African forest—all contributed to the difficulties with which the troops were faced. Had it not been for the existing railways, which formed a line of advance as well as supply, it is difficult to see how progress could have been made.

"The country in the immediate vicinity of Duala is perhaps typical of the greater portion of the Cameroons in which my troops have operated, excepting beyond Northern railhead where the country becomes open and, on account of its greater altitude, healthier; but all the coast line, and for some 150 miles inland, one meets the same monotonous impenetrable African forest fringed, on the coast line, by an area of mangrove swamp in varying depth. The zone is well watered by numerous rivers, of which the Wuri, Sanaga and Njong present serious military obstacles. Once outside this belt conditions change at once, supplies and live stock are obtainable, and open grass lands are reached; the one unusual geographical feature is the Cameroon Mountain, some 13,000 feet high, which rises abruptly from the sea, its slopes clothed with valuable plantations, and on which the hill station of Buea, the former administrative capital of the Protectorate, is perched.

"4. By the first week in October we had made good the country as far as Maka and the left bank of the Dibamba creek. The Japoma railway bridge, 900 yards in length, was broken in two places, but a fine feat was performed by the French tirailleurs in forcing this passage under a galling rifle and machine-gun fire. The Royal Navy and Royal Marine Light Infantry also materially contributed to this success.

"I now judged that I could move a force by the Wuri River on Jabassi, so as to secure Duala from any attack from the north-east; a mixed Naval and Military force, supported by armed craft, was organized and an attack was delivered on 8th October. It is regrettable that this operation was not at first successful, difficult country, novel conditions and the fact that our native troops encountered machine-gun fire for the first time are contributory causes to failure; nevertheless it became necessary completely to reorganize the force and repeat the operation, with the result that Jabassi was taken on 14th October. From this place a force was pushed out to Njamtan, and the country around Jabassi was cleared of the enemy.

"My next objective was Edea, on which place I determined an advance should be made from three directions, two by land and one by river. Strong forces were moved from Japoma and by the Njong River to Dehane, thence by a track towards Edea. The third force proceeded by the Sanaga River; the navigation of this river is most difficult, dangerous bars hinder entrance into its mouth and sand banks obstruct the passage up to Edea. The feat performed by Commander L. W. Braithwaite, R.N., in navigating an armed flotilla on the Sanaga was a remarkable one. Thus the combined movement, outlined above, was entirely successful and Edea was occupied on the morning of 26th October. This result had not been achieved without hard fighting, particularly on the part of the force operating by the line of the railway. It was during the preliminary operations in this undertaking that Lieutenant Child, Director of Nigeria Marine, Commander Gray, and Captain Franqueville, of the French Army, lost their lives through the capsizing of their boat in the surf at the mouth of the Njong River—valuable lives whose losses it was difficult to replace.

"5. During the latter half of October the small force under Lieut.-Colonel Hayward was continuously engaged with the enemy on the line of the Northern Railway, but had made such good progress that I was in a position to arrange for an attack on Victoria, Soppo, and Buea. As in previous operations I divided my force, part of which was moved by water to Tiko, part from Susa by Mpundu on the Mungo River, and the third portion supplied by the Royal Navy and Royal Marine Light Infantry moved by sea to Victoria. The opposition met with cannot be described as serious, but the country was very trying to troops; the energy with which our advantage was pushed appeared to demoralize the Germans, and by the 15th November we had secured Buea, with Soppo and Victoria. We inflicted considerable casualties on the enemy whilst escaping very lightly ourselves.

"With the double object of striking an effective blow at the enemy and at the same time relieving the pressure on the southern frontier of Nigeria I decided to clear the whole of the Northern Railway of the enemy, and for this purpose concentrated a force at Mujuka, under command of Colonel Gorges, on 30th November. This force gradually fought its way to the North and reached Nkongsamba (railhead), which was surrendered to us on 10th December. It is worthy of remark that we took two aeroplanes at this place—the first machines that had ever arrived in West Africa. The advance was continued to Dschang, which was occupied on 3rd January, and the fort destroyed; most of the hostile resistance was met with at the Nkam River, but our columns rarely remained unmolested and experienced difficulties in operating in a class of country totally different to that to which they had by then become accustomed. I decided, as soon as the fort at Dschang had been destroyed, that the place should be evacuated and Nkongsamba, with its outpost at Bare, should be our most advanced position. It was unfortunate that we could not continue to hold Dschang, as our withdrawal gave a false impression to the natives and emboldened the enemy. However, with the troops at my disposal I did not feel strong enough to maintain and supply a post 55 miles north of railhead, in a difficult and mountainous country.

"6. Early in 1915 the situation was as follows:—

"British troops holding Duala, the Northern Railway with Bare, Victoria, and Dibombe (a defended post south-west of Jabassi).

"French troops on the line of the Midland Railway up to and including Edea, which place was partially isolated as one span of the first of the two bridges had been destroyed. A detachment at Kribi was protecting that seaport from land attack.

"Ships and armed craft of the Allied Navies had visited the whole of the Cameroons seaboard, and had established bases for small craft to patrol the rivers where navigable.

"By this time approximately 1,000 male Europeans, only 32 of whom were incapable of bearing arms, had been deported for internment in Europe.

"Towards the end of 1914 the French, under General Aymerich, and Belgian troops based on French Equatorial Africa, commenced to make their presence felt in the South and South-East, but my force was separated from them by a distance of approximately 400 miles.

"In the North an Allied force was fully occupied in observing Mora and Garua.

"At and near Ossidinge a small British force from Nigeria and German forces were in contact.

"Notwithstanding the number of troops—British, French, and Belgian—in the country it was impossible at this period to co-ordinate their movements, owing to the vastness of the area over which they were scattered and the impossibility of establishing any means of intercommunication between the various Commanders. Furthermore, it was difficult for me to pursue a very active policy, as it was necessary to maintain comparatively strong garrisons in the places already occupied. Posts on our lines of communications were also absorbing troops from my somewhat depleted force, amongst which sickness was beginning to play its part.

"7. It was on the 5th January that the German Commander endeavoured to deliver a serious blow to the French force commanded by Colonel Mayer. Two practically simultaneous attacks were made against his force; the first at Kopongo, on the railway, the second at Edea. I had obtained some knowledge of the German Commander's intention, and the post at Kopongo had been slightly augmented, with the happy result that the attack on this point was easily repulsed, but not until the railway and telegraph lines had both been cut and all communication with Edea severed. The troops at Edea had, however, to bear the brunt of a more serious movement. The locality of Edea is by no means easy to defend owing to the proximity of the forest, the scattered nature of the buildings, and inequality of the ground; but so skilfully were the defences devised, and so good was the French marksmanship, that at the termination of the combat the Germans left on the field 23 Europeans dead and 190 native soldiers killed and wounded. The French loss consisted of 1 European sergeant and 3 tirailleurs killed and 11 tirailleurs wounded. A machine gun, number of rifles, ammunition and equipment fell into the French hands. It is significant that this was the first and last occasion on which the Germans attempted an operation of this nature on a comparatively large scale.

"Towards the end of January, Lieut.-Colonel (now Brigadier-General) Cunliffe arrived at Duala on a mission from Lagos, and as a result of a conference it was agreed that a more active prosecution of the campaign in the Northern Cameroons should be undertaken. I detached Major (now Lieut.-Colonel) W. D. Wright, V.C., a most able officer, from the staff of the British Contingent under my command and placed his services at the disposal of the Officer Commanding the Allied Forces at Garua. I also arranged with Captain Fuller, R.N., for the despatch of a naval field gun to Yola, via the Niger and Benue Rivers, for eventual use against the forts at Garua.

"The early days of February were marked by great hostile activity in the neighbourhood of Northern Railhead. Lieut.-Colonel Cockburn, commanding a battalion of the Nigeria Regiment, had a serious encounter with the enemy at Mbureku on the morning of the 3rd February, resulting in the capture of the hostile camp, a large quantity of small-arm ammunition, and equipment. We were, however, unable to reap the full advantage of our success, as Lieut.-Colonel Cockburn was obliged to transfer his force to the neighbourhood of Harmann's Farm, where the Sierra Leone Battalion was engaged with the enemy. During these two incidents we lost nearly 120 native soldiers killed, wounded, or missing; but, after we had consolidated our position at Bare, the enemy did not follow up the slight advantage he had gained.

"Constant activity during February had failed to gain for us any material advantage to the north of the railway, and there were a series of small incidents which culminated in the second attack by our troops on the points known as Stoebel's and Harmann's Farms on 4th March. I regret that this attack was not successful and we lost some valuable lives, including Major (Lieut.-Colonel) G. P. Newstead, commanding the Sierra Leone Battalion, and Captain C. H. Dinnen, Staff Captain, an officer of great promise. The enemy must, however, have suffered in a similar degree, as it was later found that he had evacuated his defensive position and retired further north.

"During February I received valuable reinforcements from French and British West African Colonies, and I was enabled to reconstitute my force and place a more homogeneous unit at the disposal of Lieut.-Colonel R. A. de B. Rose, commanding the Gold Coast Regiment.

"8. On the 12th March a mission from French Equatorial Africa, at the head of which was Monsieur Fourneau, Lieutenant-Gouverneur du Moyen Congo, reached Duala. Its object was to invite my co-operation in an immediate advance, in conjunction with the troops under General Aymerich from south-east and east, against Jaunde. Since the occupation of Duala, Jaunde had been transformed into the temporary seat of the Colonial Administration. I fully realized the political and strategic importance of Jaunde, but demurred embarking on such an operation at that moment. It was late in the season and the rains were already beginning, besides which the troops I was able to employ were insufficient to ensure success in the absence of effective co-operation, in the immediate vicinity of Jaunde, by the troops under General Aymerich. Owing to the difficulty of communication it was quite unsafe to count on this. However, in view of the great advantage which would follow an early occupation of Jaunde, I consented to co-operate with all my available strength, and the 20th April was fixed as the date on which an advance should be made from the line Ngwe-So Dibanga, on the Kele River. I consequently entrained a British force, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Haywood, on 7th April, which was to commence a methodical advance in co-operation with the French troops under Colonel Mayer. The forcing of the line of the Kele River and the position at Ngwe, both of which places were obstinately defended, occasioned my troops some losses. I further found it necessary to despatch a force to Sakbajeme to deny the crossing of the Sanaga River at that place to the enemy. It soon became evident that the enemy was withdrawing troops from other and more distant parts of the Colony to resist our further advance.

"At midnight 23rd/24th April the blockade of the Cameroons was declared, and every artifice was used to deceive the enemy, and incessant and unremitting activity was maintained by the Royal Navy on the coast line, so as to induce the enemy to believe that disembarkation would be made at a point from which a force could be marched on Jaunde. Campo had been occupied by a Naval detachment, and boat patrol of the river as far as Dipikar was maintained.

"The advance from the line already mentioned was subsequently postponed till 1st May, on which date the French and British columns moved forward to make good Eseka and Wum Biagas respectively.

"The French advance on Eseka was conducted with some difficulty, as broken bridges denied them the use of the railway line for supply trains. Commandant Mechet, who conducted the advance, successfully overcame all difficulties, and after being seriously opposed at Sende, reached Eseka on 11th May.

"Turning to the British advance, on 1st May Lieut.-Colonel Haywood recommenced his march eastwards from Ngwe, and driving in the hostile outposts at Ndupe, on the 3rd May his force was facing the formidable position which the enemy had established on the left bank of the Mbila River at Wum Biagas. We captured the position on 4th May, but not without serious losses in European officers. A warm tribute is due to the bravery and steadiness displayed by our Native troops, and to the pluck and endurance of the European ranks in face of such stubborn resistance.

"As previously arranged, the French force at Eseka now moved north and joined the British at Wum Biagas, and Colonel Mayer left Edea to assume command of the Allied expedition. Stores and supplies were pushed forward by road, and a naval 12-pounder gun was despatched to reinforce our artillery.

"Owing to the heavy casualties which had occurred in the ranks of the two battalions of the Nigeria Regiment and the inability of Nigeria, owing to the many calls made by General Cunliffe's troops, to supply me with trained soldiers, I decided towards the end of May to establish a training depot at Duala. The recruits were enlisted in Nigeria, and transferred to Duala for training. This proved a great success, and by its means 536 soldiers were trained and passed into the ranks.

"9. On 11th May I received a message from the Governor-General of French Equatorial Africa, which informed me that the progress of the troops under General Aymerich had not been as rapid as expected, and that as neither Dume nor Lomie had been captured, no definite date could be given for the advance from those places. As I realized that the advance on Jaunde, if delayed for any length of time, would be seriously interfered with by the rains, and the sickness among both Europeans and natives, which was already causing me some anxiety, would rapidly increase, I instructed Colonel Mayer to push on with all vigour, in consequence of which he left Wum Biagas on 25th May.

"I regret that supply difficulties soon made themselves evident; the country was barren, and with all available carriers and the few motor vehicles at my disposal, at that time only three, I was unable to transport food for Europeans and natives with sufficient rapidity. Handicapped by the almost impenetrable bush and a terrain which afforded many defensive positions, the advance became exceedingly slow. At every turn of the road the advance was met by machine-gun fire, so that during the 25th and 26th May only 5 miles was made good. It took two days to force the enemy from Njok. The enemy evidently had received reinforcements and commenced to interfere with our line of communication, which was peculiarly susceptible to attack, while the long convoys of carriers were singularly prone to panic. I received an appeal from Colonel Mayer for reinforcements, as in addition to other disabilities dysentery had broken out in his force. I sent forward such troops as were available and took measures to obtain more carriers from the West African Colonies.

"From 31st May till 4th June Colonel Mayer was held up at a position at Matem which presented more than usual difficulties owing to the swamps, which rendered a turning movement impossible. By the 5th June only 12 miles from Wum Biagas had been made good. About this date Colonel Mayer informed me that owing to sickness, especially amongst Europeans, and to the stubborn resistance of the enemy, he was of opinion that the further advance of his column on Jaunde was impracticable, and he proposed, pending further instructions, to establish himself on the Puge River, where he could await the approach of General Aymerich's troops. I immediately informed the Governor-General of Equatorial Africa of the situation, adding that unless he had recent news of General Aymerich's advance I should be obliged to withdraw Colonel Mayer's force to the line of the Kele River. On 7th June Governor-General Merlin informed me by telegraph that he had received no further news from the Southern Cameroons. I thereupon decided to withdraw our force to the Ndupe River preparatory to holding a line So Dibanga–Ngwe. A serious attack on one of our convoys of 500 carriers, and the consequent loss of food supplies, decided Colonel Mayer to retire without further delay. During the 16th and 17th June our rearguards were harassed, but never broken, and the enemy suffered considerably in his attacks. I deemed it advisable to send forward a reinforcement of the last troops at my disposal so that the pressure on our withdrawal could be relieved; these troops, after leaving Duala on the morning of the 15th June, bivouacked the following day at Ngui, 35 miles beyond Edea, having completed much of the distance in heavy tropical rains. On the following morning, after resuming their march, they reached Colonel Mayer's column at a most opportune moment during a heavy attack on the rearguard. Not till 28th June did the hostile activity cease, when our posts were firmly established at Ngwe and on the Kele River at So Dibanga. In comparison to the size of our force the casualties were serious, 25 per cent. being either killed or wounded. I regret that this operation was not more fruitful in results, and I fully recognize the fact that Colonel Mayer was not in a position to undertake, single-handed, an advance on Jaunde, but I had hoped that the pressure that was being brought on the hostile forces in the Southern Cameroons would have had the effect of preventing a concentration against us.

"During this period our troops near Northern Railhead were not in a position to undertake any serious offensive action.

"10. There was now an unavoidable lull in the operations caused by the rains. I seized this opportunity to send as many British officers and non-commissioned officers as possible to the United Kingdom for a few weeks' rest, and I arranged that most of the native troops from Nigeria and the Gold Coast should, in turn, visit their own Colonies. I managed, however, to send detachments to operate near the Njong and Campo Rivers respectively. A French detachment from Ngwe also carried out a successful reconnaissance in July.

"It was on 25th and 26th August, 1915, at a conference which took place at Duala between Governor-General Merlin, General Aymerich, and myself, that the plan was decided on by which the Cameroons was eventually conquered.

"The fall of Garua, in the north, early in June enabled a British and French force to be set free which could move through the highlands of the Cameroons to the south.

"General Aymerich, whose troops were now established at Bertua and Dume, promised definite co-operation, with Jaunde, as before, the objective, whilst a force under Lieut.-Colonel le Meillour moved parallel to the eastern frontier of Muni, and was to cross the Campo River and move in the direction of Ebolowa. It was also arranged that I should show such activity as was possible from Northern Railhead so as to assist the British force at Ossidinge in its attempt to link up with other troops from Nigeria, and further that a force should land at Campo and move parallel to the northern frontier of Spanish Guinea.

"It was unfortunate that Brigadier-General Cunliffe was unable to attend this conference, but all details were communicated to him, and he was asked to exercise all possible pressure from the north. His rôle was most admirably carried out.

"The arrival of the 5th Light Infantry of the Indian Army strengthened my command, and further reinforcements from French West Africa were promised. The General Officer Commanding at Freetown and the Governors of Nigeria and the Gold Coast agreed to send me the carriers I required and to maintain them by monthly drafts. It was thanks to these officers that, in spite of a rather heavy sick roll among carriers, an efficient transport service was maintained throughout. My requirements in motor transport were also met; this service proved invaluable and far exceeded my expectations. Thus by 22nd September preparations were sufficiently far advanced for a move to be made in an easterly direction. Many of the earlier operations were a repetition of those which had taken place in May and June, but the general plan differed in so much that I arranged for the British and French lines of supply to be kept distinct, whilst I also determined that Eseka should be made the French advanced base from which operations could be carried forward to the Jaunde–Kribi road, and that our general advance should be carried out by means of parallel columns by road and railway. Our communications needed much repair, including the total reconstruction of a heavy railway bridge and a deviation necessitating considerable labour on earthwork. Many other smaller bridges were broken or destroyed; those on the road were made fit for heavy traffic, those on the railway were practically rebuilt.

"The British force, as previously, experienced stiff resistance at Wum Biagas, but on 9th October that place was captured after a lively action, in which the Nigerian and Gold Coast troops once more distinguished themselves. From here we were enabled to send out flanking columns and render some assistance to the French troops who were fighting their way to Eseka. The Kele River, in flood, proved a formidable obstacle, and its crossing somewhat delayed the British flanking columns sent out from Wum Biagas. Sende was occupied by the French on 25th October, and the enemy was driven from Eseka on 30th October. Considerable rolling stock, left behind after our previous advance, was retaken, and proved a valuable addition to our exiguous supply of engines and wagons. By 23rd November, both British and French forces were ready for the final advance, the bush track from Edea to Wum Biagas had been converted into a good motor road, and through railway communication, Duala–Eseka, was nearing completion. There were also over 7,000 carriers employed on such sections of the communications as were still unfit for motor or rail traffic. Dschang Mangas was selected as the primary objective of the British force, whilst the French were directed to make good the line of the Jaunde-Kribi road. Both forces slightly modified their tactics, and the advance was generally carried out by a main body, with two wings moving on as wide a front as the nature of the country permitted. The method of our advance appears to have entirely disconcerted the enemy and, although he still continued strenuously to resist our advance, it became apparent that his strength was gradually becoming exhausted. Towards the end of November the fighting in and around Lesogs by the troops under Lieut.-Colonel Cockburn was of a very severe nature, but the troops from the Northern Provinces of Nigeria gallantly rose to the occasion and, despite all difficulties of the country, were not to be denied in their endeavour to dislodge the enemy. Much credit is due to these troops and their leaders for the admirable conduct of this operation. Ngung was reached on the 30th November, and, up to this place, every defensive position was disputed by the enemy. On 7th December the advance on Dschang Mangas was continued and both main and flank columns were subject to opposition. A well executed move by a small force of the Gold Coast Regiment, under Captain Butler, V.C., considerably disturbed the enemy; the capture of one of his machine guns and several thousand rounds of ammunition, in addition to important documents, produced considerable effect. On 17th December the more open and cultivated country was reached and we took Dschang Mangas.

"From 26th November onwards the French were fighting their way through very broken country to Mangeles; they had to face determined opposition and lost a considerable number of European and native soldiers, but their tenacity of purpose was rewarded by the capture of Mangeles on 21st December, after intermittent fighting covering a period of five days. The column halted at this place for rest and to establish a supply depot.

"11. I must now indicate the turn that events had taken beyond Northern Railhead. I was informed from Nigeria that the British force at Ossidinge, under Major Crookenden, would be prepared to move on Bamenda on 12th October. I therefore ordered a force consisting of portions of the West African Regiment, 5th Light Infantry, and some artillery, under Lieut.-Colonel Cotton, 5th Light Infantry, to move on Dschang from Bare, also starting on 12th October. Hostile opposition was experienced at Mwu and Nkam Rivers and from an entrenched position at Sanschu. On 6th November Dschang was occupied. On receipt of information that Major Crookenden's force had reached Bamenda on 22nd October I ordered Lieut.-Colonel Cotton to leave a garrison in Dschang and move a force to Bagam to co-operate with Major Crookenden in an attack on that place. The enemy had, however, forestalled us and withdrawn to Fumban, whither we pursued him after experiencing some difficulty in effecting the crossing of the Nun River. On 2nd December the important centre of Fumban was occupied and an abortive effort of the enemy to retake it was frustrated. Brigadier-General Cunliffe, foreseeing the possibility of obstinate resistance at Fumban, had directed two other small columns to co-operate in our movement on that place. These columns arrived almost simultaneously with that under Lieut.-Colonel Cotton. Major Crookenden's troops then continued their advance under Brigadier-General Cunliffe's direction, whilst I placed garrisons in Fumban, Bana, and Bagam, and the bulk of Lieut.-Colonel Cotton's troops returned to railhead. I was thus enabled to withdraw a small force to move from Nkongsamba to Jabassi and penetrate the Bafia country, where I still believed there were small hostile parties. I also was enabled to detach a force to assist the French column operating from Campo. I think I may consider our operations in the Northern area were entirely satisfactory, and the simultaneous advance of our columns took the heart out of the remnants of the enemy forces in that district. Furthermore, we had established touch with Brigadier-General Cunliffe's columns, which were now converging on the Sanaga River, at a point known as the Nachtigal Rapids. Our losses were slight and the health of all ranks was considerably better than that of the troops fighting in the lower altitudes.

"12. Reverting to the operations of the main forces. On receiving information that the British force had arrived at Dschang Mangas, I decided that it would be more advantageous to move on Jaunde direct, rather than await the French advance to the Jaunde–Kribi road. In arriving at this decision I was influenced by the fact that the mind of the native does not understand the meaning nor necessity of delay, and from a political point of view the early occupation of Jaunde appeared to be all important. From 22nd December, the hostile resistance gradually weakened, strongly entrenched positions were abandoned, and on the morning of the 1st January Colonel Gorges entered Jaunde with his force. The enemy appeared to have completely broken under the pressure which he was now experiencing from all sides. Allied troops from the north, troops from French Equatorial Africa and the Belgian Congo commenced to arrive in Jaunde during the first week in January. It is, I think, a remarkable feat that troops that had fought and marched for a period of seventeen months should have converged on their objective within a few days of one another.

"The direct effect of the occupation of Jaunde was to relieve all pressure in front of the French force advancing from Mangeles, the Jaunde–Kribi road being reached early in January. British and French forces were moved during the first week in January to Widemenge and in the direction of Ebolowa via Olama and Onana Besa crossings of the Njong River. At Kol Maka, Lieut.-Colonel Haywood succeeded in securing the release of officers, non-commissioned officers, civilian and native non-combatants who had been taken prisoners by the Germans at various times during the war; his force, supported by a strong French column, continued its advance on Ebolowa, on which place a second Allied column was also advancing. A French force under Lieut.-Colonel Faucon occupied Ebolowa on 19th January, after experiencing some slight resistance. The definite move of the remnants of the German forces towards Spanish territory now became apparent, and Lieut.-Colonel Haywood proceeded with all despatch to follow them up as far as Nkan, from which place I diverted him via Efulen on Kribi, in order to clear the western area of stragglers. A British force was also moved to Lolodorf.

"Colonel Morisson took command of a strong French force, and, moving towards the Spanish frontier, succeeded in driving the German force in front of him across the Campo River into neutral territory. A similar operation was conducted by the French force which had operated from Campo, so that by the middle of February no Germans were left in the Cameroons, and the conquest of the country had been completed. . . .

He was given the honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel 9 Oct. 1902, and is Honorary Colonel, 3rd Battn. Scottish Rifles. Colonel Anderson is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He married, in 1894, Elizabeth, daughter of the late Edward Barnes. Sir A. Conan Doyle, in "The Great Boer War" (pages 533–535), describes the gallant fight against overwhelming odds put up by Colonel Anderson when attacked by Delarey on 25 Feb. 1902. Von Donop had sent in an empty convoy from Wolmannstad to Klerksdorp, and the journey was nearly over and the detachment of Paget's Horse had ridden on into the town, when Delarey made his appearance. "The escort of the convoy consisted of the 5th Imperial Yeomanry, sixty of Paget's Horse, three companies of the ubiquitous Northumberland Fusiliers, two guns of the 4th R.F.A., and a pom-pom, amounting in all to 630 men. Colonel Anderson was in command." Nothing could have averted disaster, and it was well that some of the escort had ridden on, and were not there to share it. When the first turmoil of the attack was over, the wagons had been re-marshalled and rearranged. "It was Colonel Anderson's hope that he might be able to send them on into safety while he with the escort covered their retreat. His plan was certainly the best one, and if it did not succeed it was due to nothing which he could avert, but to the nature of the ground and the gallantry of the enemy. . . . A small force sallied out from Klerksdorp in the hope of helping Anderson, but on reaching the Jagd Drift it was found that the fighting was over and that the field was in possession of the Boers."

BOLITHO, WILLIAM EDWARD THOMAS, Major, was born at Penzance 2 July, 1862, son of the late William Bolitho, of Polwithen, He was educated at Harrow, and Trinity College, Oxford. NOLAN-NEYLAN, JOHN, Major, was born 14 May, 1854, in the County Clare, Ireland, the son of D. Neylan and Mary Nolan, his wife; and nephew of Capt. L. E. Nolan. On his mother's side, therefore, he was a member of that famous if turbulent Irish family whose proudest boast it was—if it is not yet—in bygone years that some of its members had killed the Earl of March, heir to the throne of England, in battle. One of the latter-day Nolans is said to have attended King Edward's coronation, "just to show that there was no ill-feeling!" Though one would have thought the ill-feeling might have been on King Edward's side. These typically Irish people, doubtless some of them with doubtful, if not disloyal sentiments on their lips, rushed headlong into the conflict, as troopers or cavalry officers, they cared not which, on the outbreak of the European War, and fought for Great Britain and Ireland until the old soldier's family who attended the coronation was almost wiped out, and is now represented by his infant grandchild. One of the family went down with Kitchener, a trusted member of his Staff. Soldiers of fortune, the blood of the Nolans has been poured out on almost every battle-field in Europe:

John Nolan-Neylan.

"For in far foreign lands from . . . to Belgrade Lie the captains and chiefs of the Irish Brigade."

The famous Capt. Louis Edmond Nolan, of the 15th Hussars, Colonel Nolan-Neylan's uncle, brought the order for the deathless charge of which it was said: "C'est magnifique, mais ce n'est pas la guerre."

"'Forward the Light Brigade!
Charge for the guns!' he said.
Into the Valley of Death
Rode the Six Hundred."

And for some time afterwards many people mistakenly thought that Nolan was the "someone" described by the poet as having "blundered." It was ultimately proved, however, to the satisfaction of most authorities, that it was not Capt. Nolan who had made a mistake. He is said to have perished in the act of trying to point out where the guns really were which formed the objective of the Charge of the Light Brigade. We are all of us hero-worshippers, and perhaps Capt. Nolan has had countless fervent admirers since his death, and some in his lifetime. Though many of his contemporaries looked on him with suspicion as a crank who studied his profession and wrote books. He died at the age of thirty-four, a recognized authority on cavalry movements, and one who had written one or two standard works. His great idea seems to have been that the steeplechase horse and his rider, and the cavalry officer and his mount, are one and indivisible, and interchangeable. He received his early military training, together with his elder brothers, in the Austrian Army, and the fact that he was born in Canada and the particulars of his early career were made known to an English inquirer by the courtesy of the Austrian Embassy and War Office in pre-war days. It is to be feared that Nolan learned to ride as an Austrian cavalry officer, though his stirring and ambitious old father never rested until he obtained for Louis, or "Ned," Nolan a commission in the British Army. Ned Nolan it was who was Lindsay Gordon's especial hero.

"I remember," says the Australian laureate, who died fretting after the Cotswold Hills:

"I remember the lowering wintry morn,
And the mist on the Cotswold Hills,
Where I once heard the blast of the huntsman's horn,
Not far from the Seven Rills.
Jack Esdaile was there, and Hugh St. Clair,
Bob Chapman and Andrew Kerr,
And big George Griffiths on Devil-May-Care,
And black Tom Oliver,
And one who rode on a dark-brown steed
Clean-jointed, sinewy, spare,
With the lean game head of the Blacklock breed,
And the resolute eye that loves the lead,
And the quarters massive and square—
A tower of strength with a promise of speed
(There was Celtic blood in the pair)."

Captain L. E. Nolan this was, and though Lindsay Gordon admired him above all men he must needs describe his mount first. Nolan and another man were riding to hounds up there by the Seven Springs:

"And between the pair on a chestnut mare,
The duffer who writes this lay.
What business had this child there to ride?
But little or none at all;
Yet I held my own for a while 'in the pride
That goeth before a fall.'
Though rashness can hope for but one result,
We are heedless when fate draws nigh us,
And the maxim holds good:
'Quem perdere vult
Deus dementat prius!'
The right-hand man to the left-hand said,
As down in the vale we went,
'Harden your heart as a millstone, Ned,
And set your face as a flint—
Solid and tall is the rasping wall
That stretches before us yonder.
You must have it at speed or not at all:
'Twere better to halt than to ponder,
For the stream runs wide on the take-off side,
And washes the clay bank under;
Here goes for a pull, 'tis a madman's ride
And a broken neck if you blunder.'

"No word in reply his comrade spoke,
Nor waver'd nor once looked round,
But I saw him shorten his horse's stride
As we splash'd through the marshy ground.

" I remember one thrust he gave to his hat,
And two to the flanks of the brown,
And still as a statue of old he sat,
And he shot to the front, hands down ;
I remember the start and the stag-like bound
Of the steed six lengths to the fore,
And the laugh of the rider, while landing sound,
He turned in his saddle and glanced around ;
I remember—but little more,
Save a bird's-eye gleam of the dashing stream,
A jarring thud on the wall,
A shock and the blank of a nightmare's dream—
I was down with a stunning fall."

Again and again in his poems Gordon goes back to Louis Nolan :

" Where bullets whistle and round shots whiz,
Hoofs trample and blades flash bare,
God send me an ending as fair as his
Who died in his stirrups there ! "

And in " Ye Wearie Wayfarer " the Gay Gordon poet has one hope in his saddest mood :

" Vain dreams, again and again retold,
Must you crowd on the weary brain,
Till the fingers are cold that entwined of old
Round foil and trigger and rein,
Till stay'd for aye are the roving feet,
Till the restless hands are quiet,
Till the stubborn heart has forgotten to beat,
Till the hot blood has ceas'd to riot.

" But Nolan's name will flourish in fame
When our galloping days are past,
When we go to the place from whence we came,
Perchance to find rest at last.

" Though our future lot is a sable blot,
Though the wise ones of earth will blame us,
Though our saddles will rot and our rides be forgot,
' Dum Vivimus, Vivamus ! ' "

Nolan's death was the part of his life Gordon always envied him :

" Oh, the minutes of yonder maddening ride
Long pleasures of life outvie ! "

The Gordons and the Nolans are in this book—and Ned Griffiths's kith and kin. And the rebel Irish and the English, the Austrians and Count O'Kelly and Eclipse and the Nolans are all mixed up together in that weird pedigree of his family in the possession of the Very Reverend Monsignor Edmond Nolan, cousin of Capt. L. E. Nolan. Ned Nolan's nephew, John Nolan, first saw active service in 1877–78–79, in Gaika, Gaeleka and Moirosi's Mountain (Medal with clasp). He joined the Cape Mounted Riflemen on 1 Nov. 1879, and was present in operations in Basutoland and Transkei, 1880–81 (Medal with clasp). He served with the Cape Mounted Police in Bechuanaland, 1896–97 (General Service Medal with clasp). In the South African War of 1899 to 1902, this Irishman from the County Clare was also present. His deeds are told at length by Sir A. Conan Doyle's " Great Boer War," as are those of another of his name, at Spion Kop, when : " A detached group of the South Lancashires was summoned to surrender. ' When I surrender,' cried Colour-Sergt. Nolan, ' it will be my dead body ! ' " When Bethulie Railway Bridge had been blown to smithereens by the retreating Boers, the only hope of preserving some means of crossing the Orange River lay in the hope that the British troops might be beforehand with the Boers, who were just going to destroy the old road bridge also. " In this," says Sir A. Conan Doyle, in " The Great Boer War " (pages 270–271), " they were singularly favoured by fortune. On the arrival of a small party of scouts and of the Cape Police under Major Nolan-Neylan at the end of the bridge it was found that all was ready to blow it up, the mine sunk, the detonator fixed, and the wire laid. Only the connection between the wire and the charge had not been made. To make sure, the Boers had also laid several boxes of dynamite under the last span, in case the mine should fail in its effect. The advance guard of the Police, only six in number, with Nolan-Neylan at their head, threw themselves into a building which commanded the approaches of the bridge, and this handful of men opened so spirited and well-aimed a fire that the Boers were unable to approach it. As fresh scouts and policemen came up they were thrown into the firing line, and for a whole long day they kept the destroyers from the bridge. Had the enemy known how weak they were and how far from supports, they could have easily destroyed them ; but the game of bluff was admirably played, and a fire kept up which held the enemy to their rifle pits. The Boers were in a trench commanding the bridge, and their brisk fire made it impossible to cross. On the other hand, our rifle fire commanded the mine and prevented any one from exploding it. But at the approach of darkeness it was certain that this would be done. The situation was saved by the gallantry of young Popham of the Derbyshires, who crept across with two men and removed the detonators. There still remained the dynamite under the further span, and this also they removed, carrying it off across the bridge under a heavy fire. The work was made absolutely complete a little later by the exploit of Capt. Grant, of the Sappers, who drew the charges from the holes in which they had been sunk, and dropped them into the river, thus avoiding the chance that they might be exploded next morning by shell fire. The feat of Popham and of Grant was not only most gallant, but of extraordinary service to the country ; but the highest credit belongs to Nolan-Neylan, of the Police, for the great promptitude and gallantry of his attack, and to M'Neill for his support. On that road bridge and on the pontoon bridge at Norval's Pont Lord Robert's army was for a whole month dependent for their supplies."

This was really a much more useful performance than the Charge of the Light Brigade. Another account savs :

" On 2 Jan. 1900, Major Nolan-Neylan, in command of 75 European details at Molteno, the advanced post of the 3rd Division, under General Sir William Gatacre, was attacked at 5 a.m. by a strong force of Boers, with two 15-pounder guns. The enemy started off by firing on a mounted piquet about to take a post on the eastern kopje at dawn. Major Neylan posted one officer and twenty men in fort to watch the west, and with the remainder took up a position behind the rocks and embankment along the Molteno–Cyphergat railway line and immediately opposite the enemy's central position—a kopje behind which they were massing and from whence they charged. Their object was to capture the low-lying hills along the railway parallel to the line taken up by Neylan. A well-directed fire, however, checked and forced them to retire, and they subsequently occupied positions round about, and kept up incessant gun and rifle fire all day long. At one time the enemy occupied Cyphergat, and actually brought up guns into position on the high Looperberg Ridge, and shelled General Gatacre's Relief Column, which did not come into action as the Boer forces retired to Stormberg. In face of overwhelming numbers, the important positions through which the main road runs were held by a small force and the road to the Stormberg stronghold kept open. On 10 March, 1900, the 3rd Division Column, under General Sir William Gatacre, had just halted at Knapdaar, on the Burghersdorp–Bethulie railway line, when a despatch-rider, who had ridden his horse to a standstill, reported that the Boers were recrossing the Orange River from the Free State to the Colony, and that assistance was urgently needed by Scouts sent ahead from the column the day before. The G.O.C. ordered Major Nolan-Neylan to move forward with about 50 details, and to use his own discretion. About 10.30 p.m. this officer came up with the Scouts, five miles from the bridge. Their O.C. reported both railway and road bridges destroyed. Before daylight Major Nolan-Neylan found the railway bridge destroyed, but, on creeping near, discovered the road bridge intact. Boer sentries were marching up and down between the parapets, and the sand dunes, embankments and rough ground between the bridges were held by a strong force of the enemy. He crept back and despatched his orderly for Scouts and Police. Whilst waiting, a native manservant crossed the bridge with a white flag as a protection. This native said the bridge would be destroyed at 10 a.m. It was then about 9 a.m. He also said that Bethulie town was full of Boer soldiers, and they had very big guns. No time was to be lost under these circumstances, so when the forces galloped up and dismounted, leaving their horses under cover behind the hills, the Scouts extended to the left, the Police to the right, while Major Nolan-Neylan moved in the centre in the direction of the bridge. At this moment the enemy horsemen were galloping over the plain between the river and the village, and their artillery coming into action. No time was to be lost, something had to be done quickly, so Major Nolan-Neylan called in the three men on his right, and the three on his left, and they readily volunteered to go with him. The officer and his six men moved rapidly towards the stone boundary walls, near the approaches to the bridge. Firing from all sides opened on the small party, who climbed one stone wall, crossed a garden, over the next stone wall, past Holm's house, and over open ground to a brick wall in rear of the old Police Camp. Removing some bricks from the top of the wall, the men were able to rest their rifles and take steady aim. All being good shots, the range to a bare patch on the Free State side of the bridge was soon found, and all who ventured within range had a very warm reception. Very soon riderless horses were wandering about the veldt. Shells were bursting unpleasantly close, the rain of bullets was incessant, but the six held on. A little later they moved to a toll-house within ninety yards of the bridge ; here one of the six was mortally wounded. He was carried to shelter by Private Blake, who subsequently was decorated (D.C.M.). After some hours, during which the small party held the bridge, the main column arrived and joined in the fight. Major Nolan-Neylan and Capt. Schenk built a wall across the road from behind which rifle fire was kept up directly on to the bridge all night, and from the kraals men were posted, some to fire on the Free State side, some on the centre, and some on the near side of the bridge, to prevent any attempt by the enemy to link up wire from the parapet to an electric battery in the toll-house. Capt. Woon took up a position in the Cemetery, about a mile away, where he was held fast by men from our Column firing on him in mistake, and enemy shrapnel constantly bursting over him. After the enemy retired, the dynamite charges were withdrawn by the Royal Engineers. In a short while rails were laid on the saved bridge, and it was used immediately for transporting supplies to Lord Roberts's Army."

Major Neylan was wounded in action 13 Aug. 1901 ; was mentioned three times in Despatches ; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901] : " John Nolan-Neylan Major, Cape Police. In recognition of services during the operations in Cape Colony." He was Second-in-Command of General Gorringe's Flying Column, and was Commander of the Orange River Scouts. Lieut.-Colonel Nolan-Neylan has retired from the Cape Mounted Police. He married, 17 Aug. 1881, Minnie, daughter of R. P. Impey, of Aliwal North, Cape Colony ; they have four sons : Lawrence, born 14 Nov. 1886 ; Denis, born 2 May, 1890 ; Richard, born 8 April, 1896, and Vivian, born 14 Oct. 1901 ; and six daughters : Kathleen, Eily, Clare, Marié, Nora and Ita.

SCOTT, ROBERT GEORGE, Major, served in the South African War of 1877–79; in the Gaika and Gaeleka Campaigns, and was present at the attack on Moirosi's Mountain, when he was severely wounded. He received the Medal and clasp, and was awarded the Victoria Cross. In the South African War of 1899–1902, he served in the operations in Cape Colony, the Transvaal and the Orange Free State; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "R. G. Scott, V.C., Major, Kimberley Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The story of how he won the Victoria Cross is given in the first volume of this book, but the following extracts have been lately received, and are now given:

"The Cape Times" of 4 Oct. 1918, says:

"DEATH OF COLONEL SCOTT, V.C., D.S.O.

"The death occurred at Mount Curtis, Wynberg, yesterday, of Colonel Robert George Scott, V.C., D.S.O., at the age of 60. Deceased served during the Gaeleka, Gaika and Moirosi Campaigns, 1877–78–79 (V.C.), and between 1899 and 1901 he was Lieutenant-Colonel of the Kimberley Light Horse, and had command of Scott's Railway Guards (which he raised) and the Cape Railway Sharpshooters. He was present during the siege of Kimberley, was mentioned in Despatches, and awarded the D.S.O. in 1900. The funeral will take place at Plumstead Cemetery at 4.45 this afternoon."

"South Africa" for 26 Oct. 1918, says:

"THE LATE LIEUT.-COLONEL SCOTT, V.C., D.S.O.

"Lieut.-Colonel Robert George Scott, V.C., D.S.O., Cape Colonial Forces and late Cape Mounted Rifles, was born in 1857, and was a son of Fleet-Surgeon R. C. Scott, R.N. Colonel Scott served in the Kaffir War of 1877–79, and the South African War of 1900–2, being mentioned in Despatches for meritorious conduct in the latter, receiving the Queen's Medal and three clasps, as well as the King's Medal and two clasps, and the D.S.O. In 1879, when serving as Sergeant, he received the Victoria Cross for conspicuous gallantry and devotion during an attack on Moirosi's Mountain. He volunteered to throw time-fuse shells as hand-grenades, over a line of stone barricades from behind which the enemy were bringing a heavy fire to bear on the Colonial troops, which it was impossible effectually to return. After causing all the men of his party to seek cover lest the shell should burst prematurely—by which precaution many lives were, in all probability, saved—Sergeant Scott advanced under heavy fire, and reaching the wall, made two attempts to throw shells across to the other side. In consequence of some defect in the fuse, which had been ignited before casting, the shell exploded at the second attempt. His right hand was blown to pieces, and he was severely wounded in the left leg, suffering also minor wounds on the body and limbs. His escape from death was miraculous, but he recovered, and lived until 3 Oct. last, when he died at Cape Town."

Major the Marquess of Ailesbury saw the proofs of part of the Victoria Cross Volume, and he wrote the following:

"I well remember a day towards the end of March, 1900. Having ridden out from Kimberley to join a yeomanry battalion to which I had been posted, I chanced, in the course of my wanderings, to bump into the Staff of the G.O.C. A more depressed-looking lot I never saw. With their Chief sitting on a chair reading a book, they stood round conversing in whispers. On asking where I might find my unit, they took council together and then whispered that they didn't know. I felt as if I was intruding on a funeral. At that moment came up an active-looking, wiry, one-armed man in his shirt-sleeves. Addressing me as if he, at least, was not ashamed of the sound of his own voice, he demanded my wants, led me to the top of a small neighbouring kopje, and pointed out the camp of my people about half a mile away. It was long afterwards I learnt that this was Scott, but I knew on the moment that I had met a good soldier, and it was no surprise to me to hear that his services on that Staff were rewarded with the D.S.O."

One of Colonel Scott's sons sent these notes after the account in the Victoria Cross Volume was printed:

Robert George Scott, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 22 April, 1857, son of Fleet-Surgeon R. C. Scott, R.N., and Mary Elizabeth, daughter of the Rev. Richard Sinclair, Vicar of Cashel. He was educated at Epsom College and Burney's. Being of an adventurous spirit, he went to South Africa, and found service after his heart's desire in the now extinct border regiment, the Cape Mounted Rifles. He served in the Kaffir Wars of 1877–79, and was awarded the Victoria Cross for an act of most self-sacrificing devotion. Scott undertook to throw time-fuse shells as hand-grenades over a wall against the Basutos. The exploit was a most perilous one, and Scott knew it; he directed his men to fall back under cover, and then climbed up a steep wall of rock, at the top of which the Basutos were lying in wait behind a barricade of stones. During the whole operation he was under a heavy fire. He then endeavoured to toss the shell over the barricade; the first time he failed; he tried again, and the very thing happened which he had feared when he directed his men to fall back. He had scarcely lighted the fuse when the shell exploded in his hand; one piece entering the left leg, wounding him very severely, and the right hand was shattered to pieces. In addition the explosion of the shell, which was filled with black powder, set alight to his clothing, so that in addition to his wounds he had to suffer the agonies of burning. His men rushed forward to rescue him from this perilous position, but with perfect calm and magnificent self-control he ordered them back again; then, by rolling over, he managed to reach the edge of the wall of rock and dropped over—a vertical drop of about 25 feet. During all that day he refused to let his men carry him back to the main camp, as it would have been a dangerous operation attempting to cross the intervening open country in daylight. He took distinguished part in the South African War, 1900–2, being in command of the Kimberley Light Horse during the siege of Kimberley, after which he raised and commanded Scott's Railway Guards and Cape Railway Sharpshooters, which kept the railway open from De Aar to Mafeking and enabled supplies to come through regularly. He was mentioned in Despatches, awarded the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Robert George Scott, Lieut.-Colonel, Kimberley Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." At the outbreak of the late World War Lieut.-Colonel Scott, though in a precarious state of health, again volunteered his services, which were gladly accepted by the authorities. During the Rebellion he raised and commanded the Kimberley Central Commando, and in spite of the very grave condition of his health, he led this Commando through the region of the Kalahari, and took part in the engagement at Uppington. The hardships entailed by this campaign accentuated his illness, and he died on the 3rd of Oct. 1918. His one great regret was that he was unable to take a larger part in the war. Lieut.-Colonel Scott had married, in 1885, Constance, daughter of Lieut.-Colonel C. A. Daniell; they had three sons: John Daynell Sinclair, Robert Falkiner Sinclair and Guy Sinclair; and one daughter, Dulcie Mary. He was a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Cape Colonial Forces.

BURNHAM, FREDERICK RUSSELL, Major, was born at Tivoli, Minnesota, 11 May, 1861, son of the Rev. Edwin O. Burnham and Rebecca Burnham (née Russell). The family removed to Los Angeles in 1870. Fred Burnham was educated at the Clinton High School, and was successively a cowboy, scout, guide, miner, Deputy Sheriff, etc., in the West. In 1884 he married Blanche Blick, of Clinton, Iowa. In 1893 he went to South Africa, and served as a scout in the Matabele War in Rhodesia, which had broken out mainly because the subjects of Lobengula often raided Mashonaland, which the King had ceded to the British. Dr. Jameson, the Administrator of Mashonaland, remonstrated with Lobengula, who expressed regret after one of these raids, saying that the chief Lomaghondi (whose territory was under British Protection) had been killed by mistake. In spite of his apologies several other raids occurred, and on 9 July, 1893, the impi began to slaughter every Mashoni they could lay hands upon. Since the King thus defied the British it became necessary either to break the power of Lobengula or to evacuate the territory. The former course was decided upon, and about 1,000 or 1,200 white men, led by Dr. Jameson, invaded Matabeleland. Lobengula, after being beaten in the battles of the Shangani (25 Oct. 1891) and the Imbembezi (1 Nov. 1891), fled from Bulawayo, and did not surrender himself. A force under Major Patrick Forbes was sent to follow and capture the King. The column could not proceed quickly, owing to bad weather, short rations and the absence of roads, so Major Forbes ordered Major Wilson and 18 men to go forward and reconnoitre. The understanding was that if the party did not return by sundown, it was to be supported by the whole column. This patrol was accompanied by Mr. Burnham, the American Scout, "one of the three men who were eye-witnesses of that eventful night's work which ended so tragically at dawn."

Frederick R. Burnham.

For his services in the Matabele Campaign, the Government presented Mr. Burnham with the Campaign Medal and—jointly with two companions—he was given 300 square miles of land in Rhodesia, in recognition of exceptional service. Mr. Burnham discovered in the granite ruins of an ancient civilization of Rhodesia a buried treasure of gold and gold ornaments, dating from before the Christian era. He led an expedition to explore Barotzeland preparatory to the building of the Cape to Cairo Railroad. In the Second Matabele War, Mr. Burnham took an active part on the Staff of Sir Frederick Carrington, and was commissioned to capture or kill the Matabele "God" Umlimo, and succeeded in entering his cave in the Matopa mountains and killing him.

Lieut.-Colonel Sir Robert Baden-Powell writes as follows: "My first introduction to Burnham was at Bulawayo, in the Matabele Campaign of 1896. I was on the Staff of General Sir F. Carrington. We had only arrived there a few days previously when on the 5th June, just as we were going to bed, Sir Charles Metcalfe called in with Burnham to report that there was an army of the enemy close by, not three miles outside the tent. This seemed to be so improbable that we could not believe it, even though reported by this celebrated American Scout. However, he soon cured any doubts by taking me to the spot, and there they were right enough. During the night we collected a force, and took them with success at dawn. After that Burnham and I had several scouting trips together against the Matabele, and in the course of these I learned a lot from him, especially from his experience of the Red Indians and their methods. Owing to his wonderfully quick eye in taking 'sign,' whether far away or close by, I gave him the nickname of 'Hawk Eye,' and he gave me the name of Sherlock for piecing together the meaning of the sign after he had discovered it. So we worked in close accord with the happiest results. We only differed in one detail, and that was the pace at which to ride one's horse. He maintained that to walk and go slow saved the horse. I held that to loup fairly fast over the open ground and to halt when under cover was the better way. And neither of us convinced the other. His expedition with Armstrong, a native commissioner, into the cave of Mlimo is well known. The Mlimo was a medicine man among the natives with a reputation of being supernatural, and it was owing to his directions that the Matabele kept the field. He inhabited the back part of a cave, which had qualities like the ear of Dionysius of Syracuse, from which he gave out oracular orders and prophecies. They made their way in there, and Burnham shot the man and practically put an end to the rebellion in that part of the country. Though he was thus capable of deliberately killing his man where necessary, Burnham had the warmest heart possible. I know what he suffered when he lost his child at Bulawayo, and I have by me a most pathetic, heartbroken letter from him describing how, later on, he lost his little boy, a boy scout, who was accidentally drowned in the Thames some years after the Boer War. It was that which largely drove him from his peaceful retreat in England to go back to the wild in Mexico."

He operated mines in Klondyke from 1898 to 1900. In Jan. 1900, the following message reached him: "Burnham, P.O. Box 62, Skagway, Alaska. Lord Roberts appoints you to his personal Staff. All expenses paid. If you accept, start shortest way Cape Town, and report yourself to him.—Capt. White, Naval and Military Club, London." On his arrival in South Africa, Mr. Burnham was appointed to Lord Roberts's Staff, and was made Chief of Scouts of the British Armies in the Field in South Africa.

Lieut.-General Sir Aylmer Hunter-Weston, K.C.B., D.S.O., writes: "The address of my friend, Major Fred Burnham, D.S.O., the celebrated Scout, is La Cuesta (The Slope), Three Rivers, California. He is an American who came over to fight for us in the Boer War, and did invaluable work there for England. For his services he was made a Major and given the D.S.O."

Major F. R. Burnham, D.S.O., wrote the following story of the raids in which he accompanied Brevet Major Hunter-Weston: "The cutting of the Delagoa Bay Railway to prevent the 4,000 British prisoners of war being sent into the deadly fever-stricken swamps of the East Coast of Africa.—On 1 June, 1900, it was well known at Headquarters that the Boers could not defend Pretoria, but would retreat along the railway from Pretoria to Delagoa Bay. At Waterval-Onder, sixteen miles north of Pretoria, were 4,000 British prisoners, and it was reported the Boers intended sending them by rail to the low country. This would according to the opinion of medical officers be probably the death of fully 50 per cent., if not more, as they were much reduced by a diet of mealies, with only an occasional small ration of very poor meat—they were also very ragged, and suffered from the biting winds of the high veldt. There was a possibility that a dash by picked men might find a gap in the Boer lines, or fight a way through and destroy the line for a sufficient length of time for the cavalry under General French to recapture the prisoners. If this plan failed there remained only the chance for a solitary scout with charges of gun-cotton to keep the line closed. It was finally ordered that Major Aylmer Hunter-Weston, who had previously been so successful in such raids, select 200 men—these were chosen from the Lancer regiments. It was more difficult to get good mounts than good men, and no officer at this period of the war would have been allowed to weaken our already starving squadrons except for important work. It was also hoped that we could make possible the capture of a quantity of badly needed rolling stock, engines, coal supplies, and some of the Boer Artillery, known to be on sidings in and around Pretoria. At dark the column moved out of Johannesburg; I was selected by Major Hunter-Weston to lead. The Boers had many Cossack posts and scouts, but by good fortune and care we eluded them. At break of day I saw a Boer scout, and slipped up very near, with the intention of capturing him, but discovered there were several still lying in their blankets with horses knee-haltered about 200 yards away. Reporting at once to the Major, a quick deployment of a troop was ordered to envelop the entire picquet before they could carry the alarm to the main Boer commando. We dashed away on our already tired horses, but the Boers had seen us and eluded us by at most 200 yards. By this time we could see the smoke of early fires along the base of a small ridge; they extended for about half a mile, then a gap of about half a mile, then with our glasses we could see another and much larger commando. The good fortune of the night had deserted us just when we were within striking distance of our objective. It was impossible to cut through the Boer lines, and considering the condition of our mounts, it looked as if we must within an hour be entirely surrounded by fresh commandos. The order to retire was given, and I again was asked to lead. The most difficult position was now the rear—taken by Major Hunter-Weston. The Boers came on almost at once and opened fire. Fortunately, ever since the disaster at Sanna's Post, I had been mounted on a fine swift Colonial pony—he seemed to be a combination of iron and whalebone. I fed him on soldiers' hard tack, and begged many a ration of sugar for my coffee that was added to the tit-bits in his nose-bag. But this day he paid it all back to me, and enabled me to locate the swift-moving Boers and lead our forlorn handful around their ambushes. The Boers did not enjoy closing in, even when they had four to one, or more. Their plan was to get possession of passes, dongas and kopjes as near safe as possible, yet bringing the enemy under deadly fire. Still, it is a wonder the rear, where were our wounded men and weakest horses, was not entirely demoralized, and it would have been with almost any other men, even when led by such officers as we fortunately had. After nearly four hours of running fight, I saw a commanding slope and some Kaffir huts, that seemed a good place to make a stand—by this time many horses were only capable of walking. I rode back some two miles, and met Major Hunter-Weston on the extreme rear and under fire. I told him the Boers were now outflanking us and there was a likelihood of a complete envelopment. He gave me verbal instructions and written memo. to any British Officer Commanding I could find, and asked me to make the dash through before the Boers closed up. This dash was made without incident, thanks again to the pony, which, after all the hours under saddle, outran several Boer scouts in a hard five-mile gallop. I reached Major-General Dickson's lines. . . . He promptly sent some guns and 200 men; they met our force only a few miles out. It seems the check given the Boers at the Kaffir huts had discouraged them, and they withdrew at what was for them just the wrong moment—the failure in a long running fight to surround the small force was rather an unusual occurrence for them. By skilful handling, Major Hunter-Weston brought out the little force with only 16 casualties."

Sir A. Hunter-Weston writes: "The above account of one of our exploits in South Africa has been sent to me by Major Fred Burnham, D.S.O. These last few words refer to a very gallant exploit that Major Burnham did alone."

"It was next decided at Headquarters that Major Hunter-Weston be sent with a force to the west and north; I had expected to have the good fortune to go with him, but received word that Lord Roberts would permit me to try alone to cut the Delagoa Bay Line. This I finally succeeded in doing, but unfortunately got rather smashed up myself, and my beloved pony shot. But it was my good friend Hunter-Weston that finally brought me in an Indian ambulance to Lord Roberts's Headquarters in Pretoria."

Major Burnham was wounded 2 June, 1901, as has been related, while on scout duty (destroying the enemy's railroad base), and invalided home. For his services there he was promoted a Major in the British Army, presented with a large sum of money, and received a personal letter of thanks from Lord Roberts, which he says is the greatest treasure he possesses. It runs as follows:

"Pretoria,
"25 June, 1900.

"DEAR MAJOR BURNHAM,

"As I hear you are about to return to Europe, I take this opportunity of thanking you for the valuable services you have performed since you joined my Headquarters at Paardeberg last February. I doubt whether any other man in the force could have successfully carried out the perilous enterprises on which you have from time to time been engaged, demanding, as they did, the training of a lifetime, combined with exceptional courage, caution and powers of endurance. I was very sorry to hear of the serious accident you met with in your last successful attempt on the enemy's line of railway, and I trust soon to hear that you are quite well again.

"Believe me, Yours very truly,
"ROBERTS, F.M."

The following is an extract from Army Orders, South Africa:

"Army Headquarters, Pretoria, 25 June, 1900.

2. Rank.—Capt. F. R. Burnham to have local rank of Major, in recognition of his distinguished service in the Field Intelligence Department.

Certified true copy:
"C. V. HUME, Lieutenant-Colonel, D.M.I.
"Pretoria, 26 June, 1900."

Her late Majesty Queen Victoria showed much appreciation of Major Burnham's services to the British Empire, as will be seen from the following letters received by the famous American Scout on his arrival in London:

"Osborne,
"24 July, 1900.

"DEAR SIR,

"The Queen would much like to see you if you could come here some day. But as it is understood your health has suffered by your hard work in South Africa, Her Majesty desires me first to ascertain whether you are in a condition to travel. Perhaps you might sleep at Portsmouth and come across in the morning. If you are to be in England some time, you might possibly prefer to delay your visit here. But Her Majesty only wishes to consider your convenience in the event of your being able to come.

"Yours very faithfully,
"ARTHUR BIGGE,
"Private Secretary.

"Burnham, Esq."

"Osborne,
"27 July, 1900.

"DEAR SIR,

"It would give the Queen much pleasure to receive you on Monday, the 6th of August, at about 6 p.m., and the Prince of Wales would be very glad to see you the same day. Will you give my wife and me the pleasure of your company at Albert Cottage, which is within the grounds, for Monday night? There are boats which run from either Portsmouth or Southampton to Cowes. I will let you know later on about the hour at which the Prince of Wales would receive you.

"Yours very truly,
"ARTHUR BIGGE.

"Capt. F. R. Burnham."

He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Frederick Russell Burnham, Local Major. In recognition of services during operations in South Africa." Major Burnham was invested with the Insignia by the King 17 Dec. 1901.

Major Burnham has the following Memorandum: "Frederick Russell Burnham, Esquire, Local Major in South Africa, was made a Member of the Distinguished Service Order on the 26th day of Sept. 1901.—St. John Brodrick, The Principal Secretary of State having the Department of War for the time being."

Major Burnham also received the South African Medal with five clasps. In 1902 he made surveys of the Volter River in West Africa, exploring parts of the French Nigeria Hinterland of the Gold Coast Colony, and he took an active part in native troubles of that time; commanded an exploration of magnitude from Lake Rudolph to German East Africa, covering a vast region along the Congo basin and head of the Nile, 1903–4. He discovered a lake of 49 square miles, composed almost entirely of carbonate of soda, of unknown depth. Major Burnham has been associated with the Hon. John Hays Hammond in his mining interests since 1905. He was one of the eighteen officers selected by Roosevelt t oraise volunteers for service in France in 1917. The account of the killing of Umlimo by Major Burnham was published in the "Daily Telegraph," 1896 or 1897, by permission of the late Earl Grey, who was then Administrator of Rhodesia, and it is on a copy of Major Burnham's reports to Earl Grey that Sir H. Rider Haggard wrote a description of Wilson's last stand, in Longman's "Real True Story Book," published in 1894. "Sir H. Rider Haggard," says Major Burnham, "might have a copy, but mine was destroyed by Indians in our fighting in Mexico." When the late Richard Harding Davis selected six men as typical real soldiers of fortune, Major Burnham was one of them. He modestly says himself that what he did fell far short of what he might have done, but that Lord Roberts and all the men with whom he worked, whatever his shortcomings were, were still his friends, and this is the list of some of them: General Carrington, General Baden-Powell, Colonel the Hon. Maurice Gifford, Colonel Hume, General Hunter-Weston, Cecil Rhodes and the romantic soldier, Major Allan Wilson. "Yet I feel that all our little wars, sieges and combats sink into such insignificance compared with what is being done now, that it seems a little presumptuous to have anything more than a bare mention in such a book as you are preparing."

Seaforth Highlanders, and served in the operations against the Zakka Khels, and was killed in action on Friday, 21 Feb. 1908, while commanding the battalion. At morning service on Sunday, 23rd, in St. Columba's (Church of Scotland), Park Street, S.W., the Rev. A. Fleming, D.D., made the following reference to Major Forbes-Sempill's untimely death: "A devoted member of the Scottish Church we love so well, 'a distinguished soldier and so good,' as one who loved him touchingly writes, he leaves behind him a noble and inspiring memory. There will be many a sore heart in the hills of Don to-day, but many a proud and thankful one as well. For the hillsman has died on the hill, and the soldier on the field of battle, and another name has been added to the long roll of Scotsmen who have earned in life the proud title 'without fear; without reproach.'" Handel's Dead March was played after the service.

Hon. D. Forbes-Sempill.

JOURDAIN, CHARLES EDWARD ARTHUR, Capt., was born 7 May, 1869, son of the late Rev. F. Jourdain, M.A., R.D, Vicar of Ashbourne and Rector of Mapleton, and of Mrs. E. Jourdain, of 24, St. Margaret's Road, Oxford. He was educated at Sandhurst, and entered the Service on the 22nd Aug. 1888, joining the 1st Battn. Loyal North Lancashire Regt. at Mhow, and serving with them at Mhow, Kamptee, Poona, and in Ceylon, from whence he proceeded to Cape Town, where the battalion was stationed at the outbreak of the South African War. From Aug. to Dec. he served as Adjutant of the half-battalion of that regiment outside Kimberley, and took part in Lord Methuen's advance, including the Battles of Belmont, Enslin, Modder River and Magersfontein. He then was given command of the Mounted Infantry Company of his regiment in the 3rd Mounted Infantry, and took part with it in the Relief of Kimberley, the Battles of Paardeberg, Dreifontein, Zand River, Johannesburg, capture of Pretoria and Diamond Hill, afterwards being present at the operations near Belfast. He served throughout the whole war from start to finish, and was only absent for one short period of ten days through malaria in 1901, and at the conclusion of hostilities was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Charles Edward Arthur Jourdain, Capt., Loyal North Lancashire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902; the Warrant sent 4 Nov. 1902. He proceeded home with the battalion in 1902, serving at Devonport and the Curragh, and later serving as Adjutant of his battalion, and also commanding the Depôt at Preston. From there he exchanged to the 2nd Battn. at Mauritius, and with them he served at Poona and Bangalore, being awarded the Delhi Durbar Medal, 1911. He was promoted to command the 2nd Battn. in Dec. 1913, and on the outbreak of war he proceeded in command of the battalion to East Africa, where he performed most arduous and efficient service in command of a large district, as well as commanding his own battalion, and at the action of Tanga he displayed great resource and bravery, and it was mainly through the fine stand made by his battalion, which he commanded most efficiently, that the force was able to re-embark and make good its retirement. Colonel Jourdain remained in East Africa for over three years, and then proceeded to Egypt and Palestine, still in command of his battalion. In 1918 his battalion was brought to France, and took part in the first fighting of the counter-offensive in July, 1918, under the French General Mangin, near Rheims, where he displayed great bravery, and was killed by a shell on the 29th July, 1918, when gallantly leading his battalion in the counter-offensive near Grand Rozoy. He was buried near where he fell on the Grand Rozoy Road. Although his four years' command of the battalion terminated in Dec. 1917, he preferred to remain with his battalion, and he thus met his death after four years' arduous, continuous active service, and seven years' active service, including South Africa. He was awarded by the French General the Croix de Guerre of the 1st Class after his death. He was also awarded the 1914–15 Star and the General Service Medal, and the Victory Medal for the Great War, 1914–18. During the trying campaign in East Africa he was one of the two officers who had never gone sick or been away from duty during the campaign, and in South Africa he was one of the few officers who served right through the campaign. At the time of his death he had nearly completed thirty years' service, the whole of which had been spent in his regiment, to which he was entirely devoted and in which he had served seven years on active service. He married, 9 Oct. 1912, Alexia Grace, younger daughter of Capt. Frederick Papilion, R.N., who survives him.

He was promoted Major 11 April, 1906; became Brigade Major, 1906; D.A.A.G., 2 March, 1908, and Lieutenant-Colonel, 1913. When the European War commenced, Lieut.-Colonel Le Marchant accompanied the Expeditionary Force to France and Flanders. He was mentioned in Despatches 19 Oct. 1914, and 10 Dec. 1914, and fell at La Ferté-sous-Jouarre, at the Battle of the Marne, 9 Sept. 1914. He was unmarried. One of the Senior Officers of the regiment, in writing to the family, says: "It is with the deepest regret that I have to inform you of the death of our Commanding Officer, Lieut.-Colonel Le Marchant, on Wednesday, 9 Sept., about 10.30 a.m. The battalion was at that time in action in a town, and he went forward to visit and encourage a party of men who were in a loft of one of the houses. As he reached the loft and passed a small window he was struck by a bullet in the neck and expired immediately. He was, as you know, absolutely without personal fear, constantly exposing himself to danger in encouraging others, and cool and collected in action. To us, as you know, his loss is irreparable, and we can only ask you to accept our deepest sympathy in the grief you must feel. He was loved and honoured by all ranks, but by none more than by those who knew him best."

Louis St. G. Le Marchant.

O'BRIEN, THE HONOURABLE MURROUGH, Capt., was born 8 Nov. 1866, son of the 14th Baron Inchiquin. UNETT, JOHN ALFRED, Capt., was born 3 Oct. 1868, only son of the late Capt. John Unett, 3rd Hussars. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho! and entered the East Yorkshire Regt. 8 June, 1889; was promoted Lieutenant 15 Dec. 1891, and Captain 2 April, 1898. He served in the South African War, 1900–2, as Station Staff Officer, taking part in operations in the Orange Free State, including action at Houtnek (Thoba Mountain); operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, to Feb. 1901; March, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "John Alfred Unett, Capt., East Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the G.O.C., Transvaal and Orange River Colony, 15 Nov. 1902; were returned to England, and subsequently presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He retired 3 Oct. 1908, and entered the Reserve of Officers from the East Yorkshire Regt. He was appointed Chief Constable of Essex in 1915. Capt. Unett married, in 1905, Daisy, youngest daughter of the late S. Slater, J.P., of Farsley, Yorkshire.

FEILDING, GEOFFREY PERCY THYNNE, Capt., was born 21st Sept. 1866, eldest son of the late General the Hon. Sir Percy R. B. Feilding, K.C.B., and Lady Louisa Thynne, only daughter of the 3rd Marquis of Bath. He was educated at Wellington College, and entered the Army 28 April, 1888; was promoted to Lieutenant 27 Nov. 1890, and to Captain 6 April, 1898. He served throughout the South African War, 1899–1901, taking part in the advance on Kimberley, including actions at Belmont, Modder River, Magersfontein and Paardeberg, and in the march into Bloemfontein. He afterwards acted as A.D.C. to Major-General Sir Mildmay Wilson, K.C.B., commanding the Western Transvaal. He was transferred to the 11th Mounted Infantry, and commanded the 14th Mounted Infantry to the end of the war. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Jan. 1900, and 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal and four clasps, the King's Medal and three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Geoffrey Percy Thynne Feilding, Capt., Coldstream Guards. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He was promoted Major 29 Nov. 1903; was Commandant, Guards' Depôt, 1 June, 1908, to 31 May, 1911; became Lieutenant-Colonel 3 Sept. 1912. Lieut.-Colonel Feilding saw active service in the European War; went to France in Aug. 1914, with the original Expeditionary Force, in command of the 3rd Battn. Coldstream Guards, serving with the 4th Guards' Brigade. Lord Ernest Hamilton describes the fight at Landrecies in "The First Seven Divisions" (published by Messrs. Hutchinson), pages 43–47. He tells us how the 4th (Guards') Brigade had reached Landrecies at 1 p.m., very tired, and had had about four hours' rest when there came an alarm that the Germans were advancing on the town, "and the brigade got to its feet. The four battalions were split up into companies—one to each of the exits from the town. The Grenadiers were on the western side; the 2nd Coldstream on the south and east; and the 3rd Coldstream to the north and north-west. The Irish Guards saw to the barricading of the streets with transport wagons and such-like obstacles. They also loopholed the end houses of the streets facing the country. As a matter of fact, the attack did not take place till 8.30 p.m., and then it was entirely borne by two companies of the 3rd Battn. Coldstream Guards. At the north-west angle of the town there is a narrow street known as the Faubourg Soyère. Two hundred yards from the town this branches out into two roads, each leading into the Forêt de Mormal. Here, at the junction of the roads, the Hon. A. Monck's company had been stationed. The sky was very overcast, and the darkness fell early. Shortly after 8.30 p.m. infantry was heard advancing from the direction of the forest; they were singing French songs, and a flashlight turned upon the head of the column showed up French uniforms. It was not till they were practically at arm's-length that a second flashlight detected the German uniforms in rear of the leading sections. The machine gun had no time to speak before the man in charge was bayoneted and the gun itself captured. A hand-to-hand fight in the dark followed, in which revolvers and bayonets played the principal part, the Coldstream being gradually forced back by weight of numbers towards the entrance to the town. Here Capt. Longueville's company was in reserve in the Faubourg Soyère itself, and through a heavy fire he rushed up his men to the support of Capt. Monck. The arrival of the reserve company made things rather more level as regards numbers, though—as it afterwards transpired—the Germans were throughout in a majority of at least two to one. Colonel Feilding and Major Matheson now arrived on the spot, and took over control. Inspired by their presence and example, the two Coldstream companies now attacked their assailants with great vigour and drove them back with considerable loss into the shadows of the forest. From here the Germans trained a light field-gun on to the mouth of the Faubourg Soyère, and firing shrapnel and star shells at point-blank range, made things very unpleasant for the defenders. Flames began to shoot up from a wooden barn at the end of the street, but were quickly got under with much promptitude and courage by a private of the name of Wyatt." Lord Ernest Hamilton here describes one of the acts for which Wyatt was later awarded the Victoria Cross. "In the meantime, Colonel Feilding had sent off for a howitzer, which duly arrived, and was aimed at the flash of the German gun. By an extraordinary piece of marksmanship, or of luck, as the case may be, the third shot got it full, and the field-gun ceased from troubling. The German infantry thereupon renewed their attack, but failed to make any further headway during the night, and in the end went off in their motor-lorries, taking their wounded with them. It turned out that the attacking force, consisting of a battalion of 1,200 men, with one light field-piece, had been sent on in these lorries, in advance of the general pursuit, with the idea of seizing Landrecies and its important bridge before the British could arrive and link up with the 2nd A.C. The attack qud attack failed conspicuously, inasmuch as the enemy was driven back with very heavy loss; but it is possible that it accomplished its purpose in helping to prevent the junction of the two A.C.'s. This, however, is in a region of speculation, which it is profitless to pursue further. The Landrecies fight lasted six hours and was a very brilliant little victory for the 3rd Coldstream; but it was expensive." Lord Hawarden and the Hon. A. Windsor Clive were killed, while Capt. Whitehead, Lieut. Keppel and Lieut. Rowley were wounded. Among the rank and file the casualties amounted to 170. Sergt. Fox and Private Thomas showed great gallantry—as did many others—and each of them was awarded the D.C.M. The German losses were certainly very much higher than ours. At 3.30 a.m. on the 26th Lord Ernest tells us that "the 4th Brigade left Landrecies and continued its retirement down the beautiful valley of the Sambre." At Zonnebeke, on the 21st Oct., the casualties in the Guards' Brigade were considerable, especially so in the 3rd Coldstream. The Hon. C. Monck and Lieut. Waller were killed, and Colonel Feilding, Lieut. Darrell and Lieut. Leese wounded. For his gallantry on this occasion Lord Feilding won the D.S.O. From 2 Sept. to 26 Sept. Colonel Feilding commanded the 4th Guards' Brigade, owing to the Brigadier being wounded. During this time the Brigade fought at the crossing of Le Petit Morin and the Battle of the Aisne. The brilliant capture of the Cour de Sempir Farm by the Guards' Brigade, when Colonel Feilding was acting Brigadier, is described by Lord Ernest Hamilton in his enthralling book. In this engagement, in the 3rd Coldstream, Capt. Banbury, Lieut. Ives, Lieut. Bingham and Lieut. P. Wyndham were killed, and Capt. Vaughan and Lieut. Fane wounded, while the casualties among the rank and file amounted to 160. The important position then gained was never afterwards lost, but, from 14 Sept. on, was held by the Guards' Brigade for twenty-nine consecutive days, despite a quick succession of the most determined counter-attacks by the Germans. Colonel Feilding commanded the 149th Infantry Brigade from 26 April, 1915, to June, 1915; the 4th Guards' Brigade from June, 1915, to 3 Jan. 1916, and the Guards' Division from 3 Jan. 1916, to 1918 For this distinguished record of services he was mentioned in Despatches, Feb. 1915, was given the Brevet of Colonel 18 Feb. 1915; was mentioned in Despatches in Jan. and June, 1916, and again in Jan. 1917; was Temporary Brigadier-General from 3 Jan. 1916; Major-General 1 Jan. 1918; created a C.B., 1916, and C.M.G, 1917, and a K.C.B. in 1919. Sir Geoffrey Feilding is also a Commander of the Order of St. Maurice and St. Lazarus, and Commander of the Order of St. Leopold, also Commander of the Légion d'Honneur. He was appointed to the command of the London District 1 Oct. 1918.

E. G. Sinclair-Maclagan.

PINE-COFFIN, JOHN EDWARD, Capt., was born 24 Dec. 1866, son of the late John Richard Pine-Coffin, J.P., D.L., County of Devon, and Mrs. Pine Coffin (Matilda, youngest daughter of William Speke, of Jordans, Somerset), of Kenwith Castle, Bideford, Devon. He was educated at Eton (served in the Eton Rifle Corps for three years) and Cambridge, and from 1886 to 1888 was Lieutenant, North Lancashire Militia. He was gazetted to the Loyal North Lancashire Regt. 10 Nov. 1888, and joined the 2nd Battn. in Jersey, as Second Lieutenant, and he became Lieutenant 13 Oct. 1891. In 1896 he was specially selected to go to Aldershot in command of Mounted Infantry, and he became Captain 5 June, 1898. In Jan. 1900, he went on active service to South Africa, commanding Mounted Infantry. Specially selected to join Colonial Division, and commanded the advance guard to Wepener. Later, was selected to command the 9th Battn. Mounted Infantry, and with that battalion was constantly engaged in fighting. Specially mentioned in "War Despatches," by Lord Roberts, in a special despatch for "good work in an independent command," and received a Brevet Majority dated 24 April, 1901: "He was in an independent command, near Ventersburg, Orange River Colony, and the Boers captured the American Consul and Lord Lennox, who was carrying important despatches to Lord Roberts. Capt. Pine-Coffin, with a patrol of thirty-five men, followed up the enemy for twenty miles, engaged their rear guard, recovered the despatches, and captured many Boer prisoners. The Boer force was over two hundred, and commanded by General Theron, the well-known Boer Scout." Specially selected to command a column of "all arms" to operate in the Orange River Colony. Was continually engaged in fighting, and on more than one occasion these fights had important results. His command was now increased up to 2,000 men, consisting of Irish Colonials, Boer Scouts, and the 9th Battn. Mounted Infantry, which required considerable tact to manage. They fought several engagements, of which the principal one was an action with General Philip Botha. In this engagement, which lasted from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m., and in which our troops were greatly outnumbered, they captured the Boer laager, and General Philip Botha and his son fell in the engagement. The success of this engagement had very important results in the Orange River Colony. He was mentioned in Special Despatch, and received Commander-in-Chief's nomination for the Staff College, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "John Edward Pine-Coffin, Capt., Loyal North Lancashire Regt. In recognition of services during operations in South Africa." (Invested by the King 12 March, 1902.) After this he was engaged for many months in the country extending from the Vaal River to Bloemfontein, in dispersing any raiding parties of Boers, and generally administering magisterial duties in the district. He served in Egypt, 1903–7, and became Major 26 June, 1907. The following is an extract from the London Gazette: "Brevet Major Pine-Coffin, D.S.O., Loyal North Lancashire Regt., who rendered valuable service in command of a battalion of Mounted Infantry, and afterwards at the head of a column, in South Africa, has been selected for the command of the Mounted Infantry in Egypt." In 1906 a state of great unrest prevailed in Egypt, and his duties consisted of moving about with British troops and Egyptian Police all through the country engaged in Intelligence and Police Duties. During one of these marches they were attacked by a large number of fanatical Mohammedans, and it was with extreme difficulty that they got away with the loss of one officer killed.

John Edward Pine-Coffin.

The following are extracts from official documents:

"The conduct of our officers and men on this tragic occasion was marked by a remarkable forbearance and humanity in the face of great provocation."

"We should like to express our admiration of the conduct of the British officers, which was worthy of the best traditions of the Army. Major Pine-Coffin, who was in command of the party, did all that was in his power to quiet the villagers. We have lost a gallant and distinguished officer, but the self-restraint and forbearance shown on this tragic occasion adds to the honour of the British Army."—Letter from Judge Perry, Supreme Court, Cairo.

"We are deeply grieved at your sufferings from the dastardly attack made on you and your brother officers, and how proud we feel of the cool and gallant behaviour of our countrymen, and not least of your own, which was worthy of your name and your noble county at home."

The following is an extract from orders, Headquarters, Cairo, 18 May, 1906:

"A small disturbance in Cairo may have to be suppressed. A half company Mounted Police, half company Mounted Infantry, and two companies K.R.R.C., will be ready to move at short notice under the command of Major Pine-Coffin, D.S.O."

At the termination of Major Pine-Coffin's appointment, he was offered an extension of one year by the War Office, which he accepted. In 1907 he left Egypt and took over command of the 2nd Battn. Loyal North Lancashire Regt. in Mauritius, which he held for one year, and then retired voluntarily in 1909. Major Pine-Coffin married, at Londonderry, Ireland, Louisa Gertrude Douglas, youngest daughter of the late John Barré Beresford, J.P. and D.L., of Learmount and Ashbrooke, County Londonderry, and their children are: Edward Claude, born in 1895; Richard Geoffrey, born in 1908; Gertrude Beresford, and Gwendolyn May.

MOLONY, TREVOR CHARLES WHELER, Capt., was born 28 July, 1868, son of the late Colonel C. M. Molony, C.B. He was educated at Marlborough and Woolwich, and entered the Royal Artillery 17 Feb. 1888; became Lieutenant 17 Feb. 1891, and served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98, taking part in operations on the Samana and the action at the Ublan Pass. He also served with the Tirah Expeditionary Force (Medal with three clasps). He was promoted to Captain 2 July, 1898, and served in the South African War, 1899–1902, taking part in the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Vet River and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including operations near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Wittebergen; operations in Orange River Colony, Nov. and Dec. 1900, to April, 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]: received the Queen's Medal with six clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Trevor Charles Wheler Molony, Capt., Royal Artillery. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Molony was invested by the King 18 Dec. 1902. He was promoted to Major 3 Feb. 1904; passed the Staff College, and held the appointment of D.A.A. and Q.M.G., Malta (9 Feb. 1910, to 28 March, 1914); became Lieutenant-Colonel 30 Oct. 1914. Lieut.-Colonel Molony married, in 1899, Beatrice Annie, daughter of the late Major-General W. H. Beynon, and they have two sons and one daughter.

Raithby, Spilsby, Lincolnshire. He was educated at Summerfield, Oxford, and at Winchester, and was gazetted to the Royal West Kent Regt. in April, 1889, becoming Lieutenant in Dec. 1892. From June, 1897, to Aug. 1901, he was Adjutant of his battalion, and was promoted Captain in July, 1898. He served in the South African War, and was present at the operations in the Orange Free State in 1900 (severely wounded); operations in the Orange River Colony, including action at Wittebergen; operations in Cape Colony and the Transvaal; later operations in the Orange River Colony, and on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Matthew Perceval Buckle, Capt., Royal West Kent Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." In 1903 he passed out of the Staff College with distinction, and from Jan. 1904, to Jan. 1906, he was Staff Captain (Mobilization) at Headquarters, War Office, and from Jan. 1906, to Jan. 1908, Brigade Major at Aldershot. Major Buckle was a qualified Second Class Interpreter in French, and was appointed in March, 1909, Professor at the Staff College, India, with the temporary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. He later became G.S.O., 2nd Grade, Staff College, Quetta, from July, 1909. He became Major in the Army, March, 1907. On the outbreak of the European War, Major Buckle was on the point of departure for Albania, to take up a Staff appointment at Scutari, for which he had been specially chosen. The orders were, however, cancelled, and he rejoined his regiment, as Second-in-Command, at Richmond Barracks, Dublin, whence he sailed for France on the 13th Aug. 1914. Major Buckle was present at the Retreat from Mons and the Battles of the Marne and the Aisne. He was twice mentioned in Despatches (8 Oct. 1914, and 14 Jan. 1915). He was killed in action near Neuve Chapelle on the 27th Oct. 1914, while in command of his battalion. At this time the Royal West Kents held their position for eight days without losing a trench. The "Queen's Own Gazette" published the following appreciation written by Brigadier-General Grove: "The regiment has sustained a grievous loss in the death of Major Buckle. He was quite the finest type of officer that can be met. Thoroughly knowing his duty, and very strict in the performance of it, he was at the same time always gentle and courteous. He was most conscientious, and never spared himself as long as there was work to be done. It may well be said of him that he was sans peur et sans reproche." Major Buckle's favourite recreations were cricket, shooting, polo and racquets. He was a member of the Army and Navy Club and a Freemason, belonging to the following lodges: Old Wykehamists (London), Shakespeare (Spilsby), and the Baluchistan (Quetta). In 1909, he married Marjorie Ethel, elder daughter of Colonel C. A. Swan, C.M.G., and they had two children: Margaret Elizabeth and Peter Claude Matthew (born in May, 1914).

CHRISTIAN, GERARD, Capt., was born 2 June, 1867, at Valetta, Malta, son of Alfred Christian, Esq., C.M.G., and Mrs. Alfred Christian (née Miss Hall, of Dunglass). When the European War broke out, Major Dawnay went to France as A.D.C., in 1915, to Sir John French, becoming Lord French's A.D.C. when the latter was appointed Commander-in-Chief in England in 1916, and later Military Secretary to Lord French in Ireland, with the temporary rank of Lieut.-Colonel. He was created a C.M.G. in 1915, and made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour and given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel. He is Deputy Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace, C.C., North Riding of Yorkshire, also Justice of the Peace, Northants. He married, 24 July, 1902, at Hillington, Norfolk, Dorothy, only child of the late Sir W. ffolkes, 3rd Baronet, and they have two sons, Richard and George William ffolkes, and one daughter, Ruth Mary.

Richard Rolls Gubbins.

GUBBINS, RICHARD ROLLS, Capt., was born 14 Dec. 1868, eldest son of the late Rev. Richard Shard Gubbins, Rector of Upham, Hants, and of Ellen Rolls, sister of the 1st Baron Llangattock. He was gazetted to the Shropshire Light Infantry 1 March, 1890, becoming Lieutenant 21 Dec. 1891, and Captain 24 June, 1899. He served in the South African War, 1899-1902, and was present at operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg, 17 to 26 Feb. (slightly wounded); actions at Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg and Pretoria; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Elands River (4 to 16 Aug.); operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Rhenoster River; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900. He served as Adjutant, 2nd Battn. Shropshire Light Infantry, 11 to 31 May, 1902; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to Aug. 1901, and Jan to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Richard Rolls Gubbins, Capt., Shropshire Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. Capt. Gubbins was Adjutant, Shropshire Light Infantry, 1 April, 1902, to 31 March, 1905, and Adjutant, Militia, 28 Sept. 1905, to 31 March, 1908, and was promoted to Major 17 June, 1908. He retired 6 March, 1912, and entered the Reserve of Officers. Major Gubbins served in the European War from 1914 as Temporary Lieut.-Colonel and Temporary Colonel, and was mentioned in Despatches. A newspaper report says: "Official news has been received at Old Hall, Rockliffe, that Colonel R. R. Gubbins, D.S.O., is missing. Colonel Gubbins, who held a Staff appointment abroad, was recently returning to duty, and the vessel on which he was travelling was sunk. One of the officers on board was not saved, and as Colonel Gubbins is reported missing there is grave reason to fear that he is the officer who has lost his life. Colonel Gubbins, who is 49 years of age, is the eldest son of the late Rev. Richard Shard Gubbins, Rector of Upham, Hampshire, and his mother was the sister of the 1st Baron Llangattock. In 1902, he married Agnes Edith, eldest daughter of the late Mr. G. W. Mounsey-Heysham, of Castletown, and there are two sons. Since his retirement from the Army he has lived at the Old Hall, Rockliffe. He was a very capable man of business, and took an active part in the management of the Castletown estates. His military career was spent in the Shropshire Light Infantry, in which he received his commission in 1890, the late Capt. R. C. Mounsey-Heysham being a brother officer. He served in the Boer War, in which he gained the D.S.O., and held the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. He retired from the Army with the rank of Major in 1912, and was placed in the Reserve of Officers. When the present war broke out he rejoined the Army, and was for a time employed on transport duty at Newcastle, subsequently receiving an appointment on the Staff. He was appointed a magistrate for Cumberland in 1913." The report of Colonel Gubbins's death proved to be true. It occurred on 24 Jan. 1918.

LOWTHER, HENRY CECIL, Capt., was born 27 Jan. 1869, youngest son of the late Hon. William Lowther. He entered the Scots Guards 20 Dec. 1888; became Lieutenant 13 April, 1892; was Adjutant, Scots Guards, 17 Feb. 1896, to 19 July, 1901, and Captain 24 June, 1899. FIELDEN, HAROLD, Capt., was born 4 April, 1868, son of the late Joshua Fielden, of Nutfield Priory, Redhill. He joined the 7th Hussars 28 June, 1890, becoming Lieutenant 26 June, 1893, and Captain 26 June, 1899. Capt. Fielden served in the South African War, 1899 to 1901, employed with the 1st Regt. Damant's Horse, and afterwards with the Prince of Wales's Light Horse. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Harold Fielden, Capt., 7th Hussars. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. Capt. Fielden retired 4 Feb. 1904.

EARLE, MAXWELL, Capt., was born 6 April, 1871, son of Capt. Charles William Earle and Maria Theresa Villiers. He was gazetted to the Grenadier Guards 4 March, 1891; served in the Matabele War, 1893 (Medal); became Lieutenant 23 Jan. 1896, and Captain 12 July, 1899. Capt. Earle served in the South African War 22 Oct. 1899, to 16 March, 1900, employed with the Military Police (graded Staff Captain), and took part in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin and Modder River; He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps, and for the action at Belmont was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Maxwell Earle, Capt., Grenadier Guards. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He was Brigade Major, Brigade of Guards, and 9th Brigade, 4th Army Corps, 1 Jan. 1904, to 9 July, 1905; Brigade Major, 1st (Foot Guards) Brigade, Aldershot Army Corps, 10 July, 1905, to 31 Dec. 1907; was promoted to Major 20 July, 1907; G.S.O.3, War Office, 1 April to 30 Dec. 1910; G.S.O.2, War Office, 31 Dec. 1910, to 31 March, 1914; employed with Canadian Forces 3 June to 8 July, 1914. Colonel Earle married the Hon. Edith Elizabeth Loch, daughter of the 1st Baron Loch and Elizabeth, daughter of the Hon. E. E. Villiers and niece of the 4th Earl of Clarendon, and they had three children, of whom a daughter, Margaret, and a son, Charles (born in 1914), survive. Another daughter, Evelyn, was born in 1905 and died in 1917. A newspaper cutting says: "A very sad side-issue of the war comes to us in the announcement of the death of Evelyn, the twelve-year-old daughter of Colonel Max Earle, D.S.O., a son of that charming old lady, Mrs. Earle, whose books—especially 'Pot-Pourri from a Surrey Garden'—have been a source of delight to so many people. Colonel Earle married his first cousin, the eldest daughter of the late Lord Loch, and much sympathy is felt for him and his wife in this distressing bereavement. Colonel Max Earle was taken prisoner early in the war, and endured a long spell of captivity in Germany."

DINGWALL, KENNETH, Capt., was born at Caterham, Surrey, 17 July, 1869, son of Charles Dingwall, J.P., and Julie Blanche Dingwall. Percival served in the South African War, 1899–1902, and was in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont and Modder River. He was afterwards on the Staff 22 April, 1901, to 30 June, 1902; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 26 Jan. 1900, 10 Sept. 1901, and 18 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps; was placed on the list of Officers considered qualified for Staff employment, in consequence of service on the Staff in the Field, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Arthur Jex Blake Percival, Capt., Northumberland Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He saw active service in the Egyptian Army, under Lord Kitchener, 1 Jan. 1903, to 12 Jan. 1908; was in command of the Camel Corps, and served in operations against Nigam-Nigam Tribes in the Bahr-el-Ghezal province, and at Talodi, in Southern Kordofan (two clasps and 4th Class Medjidie; Despatches 13 May, 1906). He was promoted Major 15 Aug. 1908, and later was employed on the Staff at the War Office and at the Staff College. He went to the Front at the beginning of the European War of 1914, as General Staff Officer to Major-General Monro, Commander of the 2nd Division and later of the 1st Army Corps; was mentioned in Despatches by Sir John French 8 Oct. 1914, and was one of the first English officers to receive the Cross of the Legion of Honour (Croix d'Officier). A week before his death it was decided that he was to be given a brigade immediately. He was told of this, but did not live long enough to be gazetted. Major (Temp. Lieut.-Colonel) Percival was killed on 31 Oct. 1914, by a shell, with four other officers of the Staff of the 1st and 2nd Divisions, who had met for a conference in the Château of La Hogue. General Lomax, who was present at this conference, was wounded, and subsequently died of his wounds. Field-Marshal Lord Methuen, G.C.B., G.C.V.O., C.M.G., wrote: "I had no officer serving under me in the South African War whose service as a regimental officer I valued more highly. He was a born leader of men, of splendid courage, and possessing a character which inspired all with whom he came in contact." General Gorringe, C.B., C.M.G., D.S.O., said: "He was the best Staff officer I have ever had I don't say this only now. I have said so for some time, and had he been given, as he deserved, a command during the war, he would have won still higher honours." A brother officer wrote: "He and

I were in the Egyptian Army together, and I learnt out there to admire his wonderful energy and great strength of character. I shall never forget the day he rode quietly into Wau, in the Bahr-el-Ghezal, on the date he said he would arrive, after a most extraordinary journey, in which his great qualities had had full play. His Arabs simply worshipped him. By his death we have lost one of the best officers in the army, and at a time when men of his type are priceless." Others spoke in these terms: "A very gallant soldier, loyal, straight, and the best of friends, with never an unkind word." "He was one of the few men I have ever met who apparently did not know fear." "The whole army knew of his splendid qualities. I always used to talk of him as the bravest man I have ever known. He simply knew no fear." The Sirdar, Mr. Asquith, Lord Lincolnshire, General von Donop, General Monro, General Belfield and many others sent telegrams and letters to Lieut.-Colonel Percival's family expressing their sorrow at his death. A letter from a private in his company sums up the general opinion of this gallant officer: "It is said that there are men who fear not death on the battlefield. Certainly no one could have faced death with more serene courage. His absolute indifference to danger was the theme of frequent discussion among the men. His infectious gaiety—no other word is applicable to his demeanour under fire—made a vivid impression upon us young soldiers." Capt. Percival married, in 1907, Cecil, daughter of Charles Henry Henland, and founder of the Princess Christian Hammersmith Day Nursery and of the National Society of Day Nurseries, and who has also published several children's books.

daughter. The late Major Whyte-Melville never met the late Adam Lindsay Gordon, whose fame was chiefly posthumous. Major Whyte-Melville at once recognized that Gordon was a real poet, and his letters were some of the few gleams of happiness that came to cheer Gordon's last years. They wrote to each other a good deal, but unfortunately Gordon's letters to Whyte-Melville are not extant, or, if they are, no one seems to know what has become of them. When Gordon wrote "Bush Ballads and Galloping Rhymes," he recognized the kindness and encouragement given to him by the better-known and more fortunate poet, and dedicated his "Bush Ballads and Galloping Rhymes" to "The Author of Holmby House":

"They are rhymes rudely strung with intent less
Of sound than of words,
In lands where bright blossoms are scentless,
And songless bright birds;
Where, with fire and fierce drought on her tresses,
Insatiable Summer oppresses
Sere woodlands and sad wildernesses,
And faint flocks and herds.

"Where in dreariest day, when all dews end,
And all winds are warm,
Wild Winter's large flood-gates are loosen'd,
And floods freed by storm,
From broken-up fountain-heads, dash on
Dry deserts with long pent-up passion—
Here rhyme was first framed without fashion,
Song shaped without form.

"Whence gathered?—The locust's glad chirrup
May furnish a stave;
The ring of a rowel and stirrup,
The wash of a wave,
The chaunt of the marsh frog in rushes,
That chimes through the pauses and hushes
Of nightfall, the torrent that gushes,
The tempests that rave.

"In the deep'ning of dawn when it dapples
The dusk of the sky,
With streaks like the redd'ning of apples,
The ripening of rye.
To eastward, when cluster by cluster,
Dim stars and dull planets that muster,
Wax wan in a world of white lustre
That spreads far and high.

"In the gathering of night gloom o'erhead, in
The still, silent change,
All fire-flush'd when forest-trees redden
On slopes of the range.
When the gnarl'd, knotted trunks eucalyptian
Seem carved, like weird columns Egyptian,
With curious device—quaint inscription,
And hieroglyph strange.

"In the Spring, when the wattle gold trembles
'Twixt shadow and shine,
When each dew-laden air draught resembles
A long draught of wine;
When the sky-line's blue burnish'd resistance
Makes deeper the dreamiest distance,
Some song in all hearts hath existence,—
Such songs have been mine.

"They came in all guises, some vivid
To clasp and to keep;
Some sudden and swift as the livid
Blue thunder-flame's leap.
This swept through the first breath of clover
With memories renewed to the rover—
That flash'd while the black horse turn'd over
Before the long sleep.

"To you (having cunning to colour
A page with your pen,
That through dull days, and nights even duller,
Long years ago ten,
Fair pictures in fever afforded)—
I send these rude staves, roughly worded
By one in whose brain stands recorded,
As clear now as then,

"'The great rush of grey Northern water,
The green ridge of bank,
The "sorrel" with curved sweep of quarter
Curl'd close to clean flank,
The Royalist saddlefast squarely,
And, where the bright uplands stretch fairly,
Behind, beyond pistol-shot barely,
The Roundheaded rank.

"'A long launch, with clinging of muscles,
And clenching of teeth!
The loose doublet ripples and rustles!
The swirl shoots beneath!'
Enough. In return for your garland
In lieu of the flowers from your far land——
Take wild growth of dreamland or starland,
Take weeds for your wreath.

"Yet rhyme had not fail'd me for reason,
Nor reason for rhyme;
Sweet Song! had I sought you in season,
And found you in time,
You beckon in your bright beauty yonder,
And I, waxing fainter, yet fonder,
Now weary too soon when I wander—
Now fall when I climb.

"It matters but little in the long run:
The weak have some right—
Some share in the race that the strong run,
The fight the strong fight.
If words that are worthless go westward,
Yet the worst word shall be as the best word,
In the day when all riot sweeps restward
In darkness or light."

There is a beautiful monument to Lord Massereene's grandfather in the Guards' Chapel, and this is a beautiful monument too—made in Australia by one poet for another. And both of them have contributed to the music of two hemispheres, and their songs have found an abiding place in the hearts of many soldiers and sportsmen.

TEWKESBURY, LORD, GEOFFREY GEORGE GORDON (EARL OF MUNSTER), Major, was born 18 July, 1859, third son of the second Earl (who was a grandson of William IV. and Mrs. Jordan), by his wife, Wilhelmina, daughter of the Hon. John Kennedy Erskine, second son of the 12th Earl of Cassilis and 1st Marquis of Ailsa. In 1870 his elder brother, Viscount Fitzclarence, died. He entered the Army as a Subaltern of the 2nd Battn. King's Royal Rifle Corps (then the 60th Rifles); served in the Afghan War of 1879–80; was present at the engagements at Ahmed Kheyl and Urace, near Ghaznee, and accompanied Lord Roberts in the march to Kandahar, and was present at the battle of that name. He also saw service with the 3rd Battn. of his regiment in the Boer War of 1881. He became Captain in 1888, and resigned his commission in the Regular Forces in 1895. After his retirement he joined the Militia Battn. of the Royal Scots, of which the late Marquis of Lothian was then Honorary Colonel, and after some years' service in command of a company was promoted to the rank of Major. When a battalion was embodied in Dec. 1899, Lord Tewkesbury, as he then was, joined, and has since served with it at home and in South Africa. For his services at the front he was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's South African Medal with clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Geoffrey George Gordon, Lord Tewkesbury (now Earl of Munster), Capt. and Honorary Major, 3rd Royal Scots. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He succeeded to the title in April, 1901. Lord Munster was not married. He died from an accident at the Lace Mines on Sunday, 2 Feb. 1902, being then a Major in the 3rd (Militia) Battn. Royal Scots. He was succeeded in the title by his brother, the Hon. Aubrey Fitzclarence, a Gentleman Usher in Ordinary to the King, born June, 1862, and also unmarried. Another gallant soldier also descended from William IV. and Mrs. Jordan was the late Brigadier-General Charles Fitzclarence, V.C.

Lord Tewkesbury.

VIPAN, CHARLES, Capt., was born in 1849, second son of the late Thomas Curtis Vipan, of The Mansells, Harlington, Bedfordshire. He served in the South African War, 1899 to 1900, taking part in operations in the Orange Free State, March to May, 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Lindley (26 June). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Charles Vipan, Capt., 3rd East Kent Regt. BEATTY, CHARLES HAROLD LONGFIELD, Capt., was born 16 Jan. 1870, eldest son of Capt. David Beatty, formerly in the 4th Hussars, of Borodale, County Wexford, who for many years lived at The Moat, Rugby. Capt. Beatty's other sons are Admiral Sir David Beatty, G.C.B., K.C.V.O., D.S.O., C.C. The Grand Fleet; Capt. Vandeleur Beatty, who now trains at Newmarket, and Capt. George Beatty, 1st Lancers, Indian Army (died in India in 1915). Charles Beatty was educated at Cheltenham, and at Trinity College, Stratford-on-Avon, and joined the 6th Battn. of the Warwickshire Regt. In 1892 he won his first steeplechase on a horse named Radical, owned by Mr. Ralli, in the Dunsmore Plate at Rugby. He won the Hunt Cup at Warwick. In one afternoon at Towcester, in 1894, he won four races, and was only beaten by a neck in a fifth. In 1895 Mr. Beatty steered Kestrel to victory in the Grand International Steeplechase at Sandown Park.

Charles Harold L. Beatty.

In the same year he won several races with the Nun, though he did not always ride the mare himself. In 1897 Mr. Beatty was second in the Grand National on Filbert, and in the following year he again had the mount of Filbert, and finished fourth. In 1898 Capt. Beatty gave up riding races, and went to Newmarket, where he superintended the training of horses owned by the late Colonel McCalmont. Shortly afterwards he left with his regiment for South Africa, and served in the Boer War of 1899–1902. He remained in South Africa for two years, serving in the Mounted Infantry and on the Staff of General Alderson; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900; operations in Natal, March and April, 1900; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Frederickstad (17 to 25 Oct.); operations in Cape Colony, north of Orange River, including action at Ruidam. He served with mounted Infantry; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. to Dec. 1901; operations in the Orange River Colony, Jan. to March, 1902; operations in the Transvaal, March to 31 May, 1902 (Queen's Medal with three clasps; King's Medal with two clasps). For his services in this campaign Capt. Beatty was also twice mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Charles Harold Longfield Beatty, Capt., 6th Royal Warwickshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 29 Oct. 1901. In 1901 Capt. Beatty returned to Newmarket, and in 1903, after the death of Colonel McCalmont, he took over the lease of the Stables and began to train on his own account. Shortly afterwards he took over the horses of Lord Howard de Walden. St. Maclou, who won the Lincolnshire Handicap in 1902, and beat Sceptre by a head, was trained by Capt. Beatty. In the same year St. Maclou won a Biennial at Newmarket; was beaten by a neck by Ballantrae, in the Cambridgeshire, to whom he was giving 31 lbs., and won the Manchester November Handicap. A year later he won the October Plate at Kempton Park, and the Select Stakes at Newmarket. In this same year, Zinfandel, also trained by Major Beatty, won five out of the six races in which he took part. His single glorious defeat was in the Cesarewitch, carrying 8 stones 4 lbs., and giving Grey Tick, the winner, three years and 23 lbs. The five races in which he came in first were the Manchester Cup, the Gold Vase at Ascot, the Gordon Stakes at Goodwood, the Brighton Cup and the Scarborough Stakes at Newmarket. In the following year Zinfandel again won five out of the six races in which he ran, in the last of which he took his revenge on Throwaway. As a five-year old Zinfandel ran twice; was beaten by Pretty Polly in the Coronation Cup, and won the Ascot Gold Cup. Capt. Beatty won the Jockey Club Stakes with Rising Glass. Major Beatty served in the European War from 1914–15, as A.D.C. to General Sir Edwin Alderson, while commanding the Canadian Expeditionary Force; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, June, 1915]; while serving with Mounted Infantry was severely wounded at St. Eloi, April, 1916 (left arm amputated), and died of wounds 17 May, 1917. Major Beatty was buried at Atherstone with full military honours. The band of the Royal Warwickshire Regt., to which Major Beatty was attached, attended. Among the mourners were the widow and Major Vandeleur Beatty. Admiral Sir David Beatty was unable to be present. A memorial service was held at St. Agnes's Church, Newmarket, at the same time as the funeral at Atherstone. The Rev. — Colvil-Wallis, Rural Dean, officiated, and a number of racing folk were present. Capt. Beatty married, in 1905, Lucy Alice, eldest daughter of the late Edward Beck, Esq., of Gippsland, Victoria, widow of J. S. Langlands, Major, 43rd Oxfordshire Light Infantry, and there is one son, Charles Robert Longfield, born 24 Oct. 1910.

BAGGE, RICHARD LUDWIG, Capt., was born at Antwerp in 1872, son of Herbert Bagge, late of Gaywood Hall, King's Lynn, Norfolk, and of his wife, Maria Adelaide Rosalie, second daughter of Louis Duquesnoy, of Antwerp. He was educated at Charterhouse; was commissioned in the 3rd Norfolk Regt. in 1891; served in the South African War; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Richard Ludwig Bagge, Capt., 3rd Norfolk Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He retired from the Militia, and rejoined in 1914, as Captain, Special List, attached Norfolk Regt. He was promoted to Major. Major Bagge is patron of three livings, and is Lord of the Manors of Gaywood, Islington, Haveless, Bawsey and Leziate. He married, 28 June, 1904, at St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, Anna Victoria Wilmsdorff Mansergh, only daughter of the late Major W. G. Mansergh, of Rock Savage, County Cork, late of the 69th Regt., and they have five daughters: Doreen Pleasance Anna; Nancy Adelaide; Sheila Clifford; Moira Mansergh and Rosaleen Margaret.

BULKELEY, HENRY CHARLES, Major, was born in 1860, only surviving son of the late Major Francis B. Bulkeley and Rosanna Marie, daughter of the late Colonel W. W. J. Cockcraft. He served in the South African War, 1900–1; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Henry Charles Bulkeley, Capt. and Honarary Major, 4th West Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. Major Bulkeley retired from the Militia, but rejoined and served in the European War, 1914–18, as Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel, and was created a C.M.G. in 1918. He married Gertrude Beatrice, daughter of the late Admiral Hudson, R.N., and they have two daughters.

NORMAN, MONTAGU COLLET, Capt., is the eldest son of the late F. H. Norman, of Moor Place, Much Hadham, Herts. He was educated at Eton, and King's College, Cambridge, and served in the South African War, 1900–1; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Montagu Collet Norman, Capt., 4th Bedfordshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He became Deputy Governor, Bank of England (1918), and Lieutenant, City of London.

ASPINALL, ROBERT LOWNDES, Capt., was born 3 March, 1869, elder son of the late Robert Augustus Aspinall, Esq., J.P., D.L. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the 15th Hussars 10 Sept. 1888; was promoted Captain 10 July, 1895, and retired from the 15th Hussars 25 Jan. 1899. He went out to South Africa, 1900–2, with the "Green Howards" (the Yorkshire Regt.), where he served on Sir John French's Staff as A.D.C., taking part in operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Reit Vlei and Belfast; in the operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. to Dec. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1900, to March, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, March to May, 1902; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Robert Lowndes Aspinall, Capt., East Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. Colonel Aspinall commanded the 3rd Yorkshires at mobilization, and later commanded troops of the South Garrison, Redcar. He then raised the 11th Yorkshires, a fine battalion, made up of Darlington "Pals" and of men from Richmond, Pontefract and other North country depôts. He said he would not have exchanged for a battalion of Guards if there had been any conceivable chance of leading the "Green Howards" in action, but when they became the New Army Reserve he transferred to the Cheshires and went with them to the Front. He was extremely well known in Darlington, and popular where the 11th Yorkshires were assembled for training purposes. His men adored him, and did not attempt to conceal their chagrin when he transferred to the Cheshire Regt. The battalion undoubtedly reached a magnificent state of efficiency under his command, and his disappointment was very great when it was made a Reserve Battalion, supplying drafts for the Dardanelles and for France. Lieut.-Colonel Aspinall was killed in action on the 3rd July, 1916, near Thiépval. He was a very well known writer on sporting subjects, and was a keen sportsman and a prominent figure in pre-war days at regimental race-meetings. He won the Cavalry Brigade Cup at Aldershot in 1897.

HARBORD, EDWARD RALPH, Capt., was born 7 April, 1870, son of the late Honourable Ralph Harbord, sixth son of the 2nd Baron Suffield. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901; was mentioned in Despatches; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Edward Ralph Harbord, Capt., 3rd Cheshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 17 Dec. 1901. He became Major, Special Reserve. Major Harbord served in the European War in 1914. He married, in 1906, Evelyn, eldest daughter of H. Riley-Smith, J.P., of Toulston, Tadcaster, Yorks, and they have two sons and two daughters.

Edward Ralph Harbord.

PHILLIPS, HENRY JACOB VAUGHAN, Capt., served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Acting Intelligence Officer. He also performed the duties of Transport Officer. Capt. Jacob was present at the operations in the Orange Free State, April to May, 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900; operations in Cape Colony, 1900; operations in the Transvaal, May, 1901, to Jan. 1902; operations in the Orange River Colony from 30 Nov. 1900, to March, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, April to May, 1901, and Jan. to Feb. 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Henry Jacob Vaughan Phillips, Capt., 3rd South Wales Borderers. CARDIGAN, EARL OF, GEORGE WILLIAM CHANDOS (MARQUESS OF AILESBURY), Capt., was born 21 May, 1873, son of the Most Honourable Henry Augustus Brudenell-Bruce, 5th Marquess and a Baronet, and Sophia Maria, daughter of G. H. Pinckney, Esq., of Tawstock Court, Barnstaple. He was educated at Westminster, and joined the 3rd Battn. Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, afterwards serving for some time with the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry, with which members of his family have been identified ever since its formation more than a century ago. In Nov. 1899, Lord Cardigan went to India, and it was whilst he was engaged in big game shooting that the storm-cloud burst over South Africa. Lord Cardigan, who held a commission in the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry and had been A.D.C. to Lord Wolseley in 1898, at once volunteered his military services, which were accepted. He was employed with the transport department of the Natal Field Force from 23 Oct. 1899, up to the Relief of Ladysmith, and underwent all the privations and hard fighting in connection with that memorable siege. After the Siege of Ladysmith had been raised, Lord Cardigan took an active part in the operations which followed; attached to the 3rd Battn. of Imperial Yeomanry (Sherwood Foresters) for a short time, under Colonel Younghusband. He was employed in March, 1900, in connection with the operations around Barkly West. He was next in charge of Major-General Smith-Dorrien's transport, in the advance from Kronstad to Pretoria (part of General Sir Ian Hamilton's force). Sir Ian Hamilton wrote to the Editors of this book about Lord Ailesbury: "As to Bester's Farm, he ought to know more about it than anyone. I remember well his cutting-out expeditions with his wood-cutters, and very gallant expeditions they were." He continued with General Smith-Dorrien until August. He also took part in the exciting operations which were organized under Lord Kitchener in pursuit of De Wet, and in the Relief of Colonel Hore's force at Elands River. For his services in this campaign, Lord Cardigan received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901], and, on the recommendation of the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief in South Africa, was given a commission in the Regular Army, dated 29 Aug. 1900, in the 11th Hussars, which a former Lord Cardigan had led in the Charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava. After being gazetted to the 11th Hussars, Lord Cardigan was temporarily attached to Paget's force, near Warmbaths, in Sept. 1901. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "George William Chandos, Earl of Cardigan, Capt., Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry Cavalry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He became Major in Wiltshire Yeomanry, 1903; A.D.C. to Sir A. Hunter, 1903; Major in the Middlesex Yeomanry from 1908; transferred to infantry end of 1914; trained a month with 2nd Irish Guards; posted to 8th Battn. Wiltshire Regt. (New Armies); was Second-in-Command to that battalion when it was formed into a depôt unit, when he transferred to A.S.C. From Nov. 1915, till the division was broken up in March, 1919 was "Second-in-

He had become Major in Feb. 1910. His services at the School of Musketry in South Africa were acknowledged in the following extract from a letter signed by Lord Gladstone: "In a special measure Ministers ask me to record their grateful acknowledgment of the services rendered by Lieut.-Colonel Carter, Commandant, School of Musketry, Tempe, and his Staff." He was later given charge of Musketry in the Irish Command, and eventually proceeded to France to take command of the 1st Battn. Loyal North Lancashire Regt. He led it in a charge thus described by a brother officer: "The men meant business this time. I looked into their faces and could see a sort of dull, fierce look. After the many days of being cooped up in the trenches before we ever arrived in this portion of the theatre of war, it was a real joy to them to be on the move and on the attack. They longed to get at them, and gradually, without a word of command being given, you could hear the click of the bayonet as each man fastened it to his rifle. Suddenly the cry arose: 'Come on, my lads, now for the trenches!' The cry went along the line. Every one started yelling above the din of battle. We charged, yelling, shouting, screaming, rushing madly forward at the enemy. How it looked from the German side I do not know; but it was grand, simply magnificent, from our side. We crossed two hundred yards of root-field at a steady run under fire. We leapt into the enemy's trenches, bayoneted those who were still living, and then rushed on to another line of trenches in front. The whole of my battalion were in it. It was our show." Lieut.-Colonel Carter fell in action near Ypres on 4 Nov. 1914. "He was a tall, soldier-like figure, standing six feet four inches, and straight as the proverbial pine. His was a soldier's end. He went out from the trenches to direct the machine-gun fire, but fell, shot dead, as the enemy retired. He was a gallant commander, and a great leader, under whom it is an honour to have served." He had married, in 1906, Edith Mary, daughter of the late Rev. G. H. Rigby and niece of the late Right Hon. Sir John Rigby.

LEGGETT, EDWARD HUMPHREY MANISTY, Lieut., was born 7 Dec. 1871, son of the late Major G. E. Leggett, 77th Regt. He became Captain 15 Jan. 1902; was D.A.Q.M.G., Gibraltar, 9 Sept. 1903, to 31 Oct. 1905; D.A.A. and Q.M.G., Gibraltar, 1 Nov. 1905 to 11 Sept. 1907; commanded a Company of Gentlemen Cadets (G.S.O., Royal Military College), 1 Aug. 1910, to 31 July, 1914; became Major 29 July, 1911; was D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 2nd Division, B.E.F., 19 Aug. 1914, to 1 June, 1915; A.A. and Q.M.G., 4th Division, B.E.F., 2 June, 1915, to 21 May, 1916; D.A.A. and Q.M.G., 1st Army Corps, British Armies in France, 22 May, 1916, to 4 Aug. 1916; D.A.A., Indian Expeditionary Force "D," 18 Aug. 1916, to 14 May, 1919; was promoted to Major-General 3 June, 1919. Major-General F. F. Ready served in the European War, 1914–18, and was mentioned in Despatches nine times. He was given the Brevets of Lieutenant-Colonel (3 June, 1915) and Colonel (1 Jan. 1917). He was created a C.M.G. in 1916; a C.B. in 1917; and a C.S.I. in 1919. He married, in 1900, Marguerite Violet, daughter of the late W. Cotterill, of Tongswood, Hawkhurst, Kent.

ABADIE, HARRY BERTRAND, Lieut., was born 20 June, 1872; he joined the 11th Hussars 5 Oct. 1892; became Lieutenant 20 Sept. 1894; was on Special Service, South Africa, 9 Oct. 1899. For his services in the South African War he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Harry Bertrand Abadie, Lieut., 11th Hussars. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Lieut. Abadie died before he had been presented with the Insignia of the Order, so they were sent to his father, the late Major-General H. R. Abadie, C.B., 9th Lancers. One of General Abadie's sons, Major E. H. A. Abadie, D.S.O., was killed in action at Messines in Oct. 1914, and another, Capt. G. H. F. Abadie, C.M.G., died of fever at Kam, West Africa, in Feb. 1904.

SMITH, HORACE MACKENZIE, Lieut., was born 27 July, 1870, son of the late Henry Smith, of Ellingham Hall, Bungay, Suffolk, and of his second wife, Mary Grey, eldest daughter of James Dowse and widow of the Rev. H. P. Measor. He entered the Army 9 April, 1892; became Lieutenant 22 Dec. 1894, and was employed with the West African Frontier Force 3 July, 1898, to 13 Oct. 1899. He served in the South African War, 1899 to 1902 (employed with Mounted Infantry); took part in operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1909, including the action at Poplar Grove (wounded); operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Horace Mackenzie Smith, Lieut., Shropshire Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 13 Dec. 1902. He was promoted to Captain 9 March, 1901; to Major 6 March, 1912; was in command of a Service Battalion, Shropshire Light Infantry, 19 Aug. 1914, to 15 Aug. 1915; Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel commanding a Reserve Battn. Royal Fusiliers 24 May, to 26 July, 1916; Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel 28 July, 1916, to 14 March, 1917; in command Reserve Battn. Norfolk Regt. 28 July, 1916; in command Battn. Training Reserve 1 Sept. 1916, to 14 March, 1917; Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel commanding Service Battn. Shropshire Light Infantry 8 April, 1917, to 12 May, 1918. He was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 2 March, 1918. Lieut.-Colonel H. M. Smith married, in 1904, Margaret Esther Hamilton, youngest daughter of the late Rear-Admiral H. Hamilton Beamish, C.B., and they have one son and two daughters.

PATERSON, EWING, Lieut., was born 8 June, 1873, second surviving son of the late John Paterson, of Kinburn and Langraw, St. Andrews, Fife. He was educated at St. Andrews, and in Germany, and joined the 3rd Militia Battn. Manchester Regt. in 1889, as Second Lieutenant, transferring to the 6th Dragoons 9 Sept. 1893; he was promoted to Lieutenant 1 Jan. 1895. He served in the South African War, 1899 to 1900, and was slightly wounded. He took part in operations in the Orange Free State, March to May, 1900, including actions at Karee Siding, Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, including actions at Reit Vlei and Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); operations in Orange River Colony, including action at Rhenoster River; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, including action at Colesberg. There is a delightful book by Lieut.-Colonel J. Watkins Yardley, C.M.G., D.S.O., called "With the Inniskilling Dragoons." It has a heavenly red and green and yellow cover, with the regimental crest in gold, and the inside is still better. The following extracts are made without leave from him or Colonel Paterson. The book begins: "War! The regiment ordered to the front. Oh! the enthusiasm, the hopes and aspirations, the hustle-bustle of preparations, and the farewells! Mobilization was quickly followed by marching orders and embarkation. So hurried was the departure that the service kits from Pimlico had not reached the Curragh before the first squadron of the regiment entrained there for embarkation at Queenstown. Luckily, after being nearly lost, they arrived in the nick of time to be bundled on board. It was originally intended that on mobilization the Inniskilling Dragoons should be brigaded with the Royals and Scots Greys, in order to form again the old fighting Union Brigade—the cavalry of England, Scotland and Ireland. This, to our disappointment, fell through, owing to regiments, and even squadrons, being sent off to the front directly they landed, so urgent was the need for troops. Thus brigades were necessarily formed as the troops came to hand. The Inniskillings and Scots Greys were, however, brigaded together during the earlier stages of the war, but the Royals were separated, owing to their starting on the campaign from the Natal theatre of war. This was the first regiment of the brigade to land at Cape Town, but the immediate need of troops in Natal caused their re-embarkation for Durban, and so separation from the brigade. Later they worked with the Inniskillings when forming part of Colonel Pulteney's column. The 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, comprising 23 officers, 558 non-commissioned officers and men, with 496 horses, embarked at Queenstown in the S.S. Jamaican, S.S. Siberian and S.S. Persia on 23, 24 and 28 Oct. 1899, respectively." Lieut.-Colonel H. C. Page Henderson was commanding the regiment, and C Squadron was commanded by Major E. H. (now Lord) Allenby. It is said, by the way, that Lord Allenby was approached by various publishers who had views about a book on the Palestine Campaign. Their offers did not tempt Lord Allenby to follow the fashion among Field-Marshals. At last an American publisher came along. "Well," he said, "whatever anyone else has offered you to write a book, I'll double it. And, what's more, I'll write the book myself!" Prince Alexander of Teck and Lord Fincastle were attached to the Inniskilling Dragoons. Lieut. Ewing Paterson was with B Squadron on board the Jamaican. "From first to last," says Colonel Yardley, "the regiment was worked hard in the fighting line, without a single rest, and I doubt if any regiment experienced and accomplished so much without serious disaster of any kind. From beginning to end, commanded and led in turn by Colonels Page Henderson, Allenby, Rimington and Dauncey, its dash and gallantry were conspicuous." The first period comprises the work round Colesberg, the Relief of Kimberley, Paardeberg, and the occupation of Bloemfontein. On 11 Dec. Major Dauncey, with Lieut. Paterson and six men, set out on what proved to be a successful reconnaissance. Allenby and C Squadron did not arrive until 18 Dec. They had been unavoidably delayed by the wreck of their ship, the Persia. On 27 Feb. 1900: "B Squadron, Inniskilling Dragoons, under Lieut. Paterson, reconnoitred Rensburg. Finding it weakly held, they seized the position commanding it, drove off the Boer rearguard, and took the town—a very smart performance." On 3 March a patrol, under Lieut. Paterson made a successful reconnaissance. On 20 March, B Squadron, under Lieut. Paterson, took part in General Clements's march to Bloemfontein. Colonel Yardley tells us how General French boldly pushed into the Kalkheuval Pass late in the afternoon. During the fighting that ensued one of Colonel Yardley's troops, under Lieut. Paterson, "which was keeping communication between us and the 4th Brigade, found itself left alone and guarding the left flank, which the 4th Brigade had abandoned. Lucky, indeed, that it pluckily stuck to those heights, despite being fired on by our own men, otherwise the whole division might have experienced an awful disaster. The position appeared risky, but the enemy were pressed and retreated down the pass. We had now this one troop in occupation of the heights on our flank, with only a very rough road, and no spaces on each side to manœuvre, as they were all bush and rocks. The enemy in the bush on our flanks suddenly opened a heavy fire on the Carabinier troop in the road to the front; several (about seven) casualties at once occurred; two of the Carabinier troopers and several horses being shot dead in the road. Lieut. Rundle, with the advanced patrol of Carabiniers, had three horses shot under him, and Capt. Johnson one. General French and Staff, riding well ahead, had narrow escapes and had to retire. It was not reassuring to see our General and his Staff galloping back, but it was the best thing he could do, and, thank goodness, he ran the gauntlet of fire safely. The advanced guard, however, under Major Hamilton, behaved most gallantly, and, despite the sudden surprise and their heavy losses, held their ground. Major Allenby, who was next in advance with the Inniskillings, at once grasped the situation, and, although nearly overwhelmed by the horses galloping back on him from the front, he called loudly on the New South Wales Lancers and a Squadron of Inniskilling Dragoons, who at once dismounted, took up good positions on each side of the road, and poured in a heavy fire; this rallied all and prevented the panic which had appeared imminent. All credit for this must be given to Major Allenby, the New South Wales Lancers, under Major Lee, and the Inniskillings supporting the Carabiniers." Colonel Yardley goes on to speak of the literally "crowded" hour of glorious life spent by the division in the Pass. "Lieut. Paterson, who was in advance on the left front, inside the 4th Brigade, with a troop of Inniskillings, did good service by sticking to the heights when the 4th Brigade turned into the Pass, and was our only protection there. Gradually, however, a way was made, and the Mounted Infantry were got up from the rear to take up our positions." The release of the Waterval prisoners is later described, and the share in the fighting taken by Allenby and Paterson. Like the bridegroom at the fashionable wedding, Colonel Yardley just mentions that he himself "was there" on many of these occasions. He quotes a good description of the release of the Waterval prisoners, written by Barty Paterson, the Australian poet, who often appears in these pages. Colonel Yardley tells us how the Inniskillings, under Major Allenby, came upon the whole Boer army retreating with their guns on Middelburg. "Lieut. Paterson, with a small troop, opened fire on their main body at short range, causing the enemy to bring a Creusot gun into action and shell the ridge from which our small party were firing." It was sunset, and the Inniskillings' horses were done, and the Brigade had not pushed on rapidly to support them, so the Boer Army escaped in the dark. In the engagement at Roodehoogte, we read how "Lieut. Paterson, with his troop, galloped on to a big hill, and climbed the precipitous sides just in time to forestall the enemy and drive them back, giving us this commanding position. It was a fine piece of dash, and fairly surprised the Boers." In the fight at Tevreden, near Lake Chrissie, "Lieut. Paterson behaved with great dash, being slightly wounded as he galloped, unfortunately unarmed, alongside Commandant Smuts himself." After describing the gallantry of the Inniskillings, and the heroic death of Lieut. Swanston, Colonel Yardley says: "Lieut. Swanston and our other dead were buried at sunset at the foot of the Tevreden Hills, close by which I lay wounded, with Lieuts. Paterson and Harris. The sadness of it I shall never forget, with no feeling of victory to cheer the heart—only regret." And later: "Lieut. Paterson, shot through the thigh at Tevreden, pluckily returned to duty; but this inflamed his wound, and he was invalided home in consequence." It is rather the fashion to think that all wars before the Great War were mere picnics, and that decorations were handed out pretty freely to officers and men who had done nothing to deserve them. When people were given peerages in those days it was not necessary to recapitulate their good deeds, like Dorcas's (only she fell from her high estate), and to say how many music halls or cinemas they ran, or how many strikes they engineered. And after the South African War the London Gazette gave no details as to how decorations were won. It merely remarked that each officer's D.S.O. was "in recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." For this campaign Lieut. Paterson was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Ewing Paterson, Lieut., 6th Inniskilling Dragoons. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He was Adjutant, Devon Yeomanry Brigade, 12 April, 1901, to 4 Aug. 1905; was promoted to Captain 10 July, 1901, and to Major 14 Oct. 1905. He served in the European War; commanded the Inniskilling Dragoons in France, 1915–18, and the 6th Cavalry Brigade 2 Sept. 1918, to the end of the War; became Lieutenant-Colonel 2 July, 1916, and was given the Brevet of Colonel 3 June, 1919. One has read of a charge of the Inniskilling Dragoons somewhere in France—near Cambrai, was it?—when the Doctor and his assistants and all the non-combatants, including the cooks, did not need to be pressed into the service. The casualties were very heavy. Colonel Paterson was Master, the Dundalk Harriers, 1896–97; North Devon Harriers, 1901; Barnstaple Staghounds, 1901–3. He married, in 1907, Jessy, widow of W. E. Rigden, and they have three daughters.

12 Feb. 1895. He served in the Nile Expedition, 1898, taking part in the Battle of the Atbara, and received the Medal and the Egyptian Medal with clasp. He again saw active service in the South African War, 1899–1902, taking part in the advance on Kimberley, including actions of Belmont and Modder River; Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to April, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, May to Aug. 1901; operations in Orange River Colony, Sept. 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with seven clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept 1901]: "James Philip Moir, Lieut., Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 18 Dec. 1902. He was promoted to Captain 27 Oct. 1901; was employed in Southern Nigeria 21 Jan. 1905, to 31 Jan. 1908; became Major 12 Feb. 1912; was employed with the Egyptian Army 5 Sept. 1912. He served in the European War, 1914–17, and was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1917. Lieut.-Colonel J. P. Moir was Director of Posts and Telegraphs, Egyptian Army, 1912–17. He has the Order of the Nile, 3rd Class. He married, 26 Oct. 1910, Ida Muriel, daughter of the Rev. H. A. Goodwin and Mrs. Goodwin, and they have two sons and one daughter.

VIGORS, RICHARD PERCY LITTLETON, Lieut., was born 25 Jan. 1873, second son of the late Rev. R. W. Vigors, M.A. He was educated at Marlborough, and entered the Army 20 May, 1893, becoming Lieutenant 29 May, 1895. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, employed with Mounted Infantry; took part in the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove and Dreifontein; operations in the Transvaal, May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Reit Vlei; operations in Cape Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to Feb. 1901; operations in Orange River Colony, Feb. 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Richard Percy Littleton Vigors, Lieut., Connaught Rangers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 13 Dec. 1902. Capt. Vigors resigned from the Army, 1906. He married, in 1911, Olive Muriel, youngest daughter of Col. H. J. O. Walker, late R.A., and they have two daughters.

two other occasions; created a C.B. in 1919, and given the Brevet of Colonel 3 June, 1918. He married, 7 Oct. 1899, at Clifton, Bristol, Alice Gertrude Evans, daughter of J. L. Evans, Esq.

LE MOTTEE, EDWARD D'ALBRET, Lieut., was born 20 Oct. 1873, at Guernsey, Channel Islands, eldest son of Colonel John Edward Le Mottee, retired Army Officer, A.D.C. to King Edward VII. and King George V., and of Laura Lukin, daughter of Fred Lukin, of Guernsey. He was educated at Twyford School, Rugby, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and joined the Army 21 Jan. 1893. He became Adjutant, 1893; was retained for a longer term in that appointment, during the South African War, 1899–1902, including the Relief of Kimberley, Paardeberg, Poplar Grove and Dreifontein; operations in Orange River Colony; operations in Transvaal (mentioned in Despatches twice; Queen's South African Medal and clasps); Relief of Kimberley, Paardeberg, Dreifontein and Transvaal (Queen's and King's Medals and six clasps, 1901–2), and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Edward D'Albret Le Mottee, Lieut., Gloucestershire Regt. In recognition of services during operations in South Africa." He became Captain 21 Jan. 1902; Major 8 Nov. 1914, and was appointed G.S.O.2, 9th Division, in the European War; was present at the Battle of Loos 27 Sept. 1915, since when he has been missing. He served in India and Aden after passing out of the Staff College in 1906, as D.A.A.G., Brigade Major and D.A.A. and Q.M.G.; joined the 1st Battn. Gloucestershire Regt. at home in 1912; commanded Company of Gentlemen Cadets (G.S.O., 2nd Grade), R.M.C., 1 Aug. 1914, to Jan. 1915; G.S.O., 2nd Grade, 9th Division, Jan. 1915; went to France 10 May, 1915; known to have very pluckily gone forward into trenches to rally the troops at Fosse 8, Battle of Loos, 27 Sept. 1915 The position was lost, and no more definite news has ever come through of him. He married, 20 Nov. 1912, at St. Mary's Church, Eastbourne, Charlotte Muriel Watts, second daughter of George Kempthorne Watts, and they had one daughter, Ethel Mary. The following are extracts from letters: "You will have heard by now that we are unable to trace the whereabouts of your husband. He very pluckily went forward on the morning of 27th Sept. to a place called Fosse 8, where there were very heavy casualties and fighting, and went into the trenches to rally the troops, and he did not return, and all inquiries failed to get any news of him. The position he went up to was retaken by the Germans, so there is a chance that he may have been slightly wounded and unable to get away, and that he is in their hands. I cannot say how sorry I am at this bad news. Your husband was a great friend of mine, and we are all very sad at his being unaccounted for. We can only hope he is in good hands and some news may come through of him soon.—With very sincere sympathy from us all." "I am most grieved at this distressing news. But you must not despair, in spite of all the anxiety you will feel, for until there is definite news hope cannot be gone. Any news I get, of course you shall have, but it is hard to get any. I am so very, very sorry for you, for your anxiety must be terrible, and my most heartfelt sympathy is with you. Your husband was such a help to me always, and I pray that better news may be forthcoming." "I was very sorry to hear the sad news. Your husband was a great friend of mine, and we worked together for all those months so happily. You know how much I grieve his loss, and how sincerely I sympathize with you." "I am sorry to say there is no more news, but I do not think we can expect any now unless it comes through from the German side. A message was received from your husband about 5.45, 27 Sept. 1915, saying he was coming back, and asking for a car to be sent to Vermelles (the limit for cars) to meet him. As the situation was an anxious one, General Thesiger went down to Vermelles in the car to meet your husband and hear the latest news from him of Fosse 8. After General Thesiger had started, affairs at Fosse 8 became very critical, and the General evidently went up there to try and re-establish the situation. Your husband must have gone with him, and has not been heard of since. I feel so much with you, and one cannot do anything to clear up the situation; but I don't despair, as I don't see any reason why he should not be in the hands of the Germans."

BALFOUR, CHRISTOPHER EGERTON, Lieut., was born 14 Aug. 1872, son of Archibald Balfour, Esq., of 65, Pont Street, London, S.W. He was educated at Westminster, and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and entered the King's Royal Rifle Corps 24 May, 1893, becoming Lieutenant 1 Jan. 1896. He went to India with his regiment, and they had just arrived in Calcutta when orders came for them to leave at once for South Africa. They stayed only long enough to change into another ship, and during part of the South African War of 1899 to 1902, Lieut. Balfour was Aide-de-Camp to Sir Neville Lyttelton. He was in Ladysmith during the Siege, and the starvation and hardships he then endured completely wrecked his constitution so that he never recovered, and he died 29 Aug. 1907. His D.S.O. was awarded [L.G. 27 Sept. 1901]: "Christopher Egerton Balfour, Lieut., K.R.R.C. For services in S. Africa." He married, in 1902, Dorothy Cecilia, eldest daughter of Gerald Paget, and they had two daughters, one of whom was born after her father's death.

Christopher E. Balfour.

HARE, ROBERT WILLIAM, Lieut., was born 14 Nov. 1872, only son of R. D. Hare, of Ballymore, Queenstown. He was educated at Harrow, and entered the Norfolk Regt. 19 Nov. 1892, becoming Lieutenant 7 March, 1896, and serving in South Africa, 1896, with Mounted Infantry (Mashonaland Medal). He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Special Service Officer (including service with Rhodesia Regt.) 15 July, 1899, to 22 July, 1900, and afterwards on the Staff (Staff Officer to Brigadier-General 3 July to 28 Aug. 1900, and D.A.A.G. 29 Aug. 1900, to 7 Aug. 1902). He was mentioned in Despatches [L. G., 10 Sept. 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps; was placed on the list of Officers considered qualified for Staff employment, in consequence of service in the field, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Robert William Hare, Lieut., Norfolk Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He became Captain 16 Feb. 1901, and was A.D.C. to the Lieut.-Governor, Orange River Colony, 15 Nov. 1902, to 22 Jan. 1905; Staff Captain, H.Q. of Army, 16 Jan. 1906, to 27 Sept. 1908; Brigade Major, 17th Brigade, Irish Command, 28 Sept. 1908, to 27 June, 1911. He was promoted to Major 13 March, 1912, and was G.S.O.2, War Office, 8 Oct. 1913, to 4 Aug. 1914. He served in the European War, 1914–18; as G.S.O.2, G.H.Q., B.E.F., 5 Aug. 1914, to 6 June, 1915; as G.S.O.1, 26th Division, New Armies, B.E.F.; Mediterranean Expeditionary Force 15 June, 1915, to 24 Jan. 1916. He was G.S.O.1, Staff School, Cambridge, 27 March, 1916, to 26 May, 1917; was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 12 Jan. 1917; Brigadier-General, General Staff, Northern Command, 15 Feb. 1919. He was twice mentioned in Despatches; was given the Brevet of Colonel 24 Jan. 1917, and created a C.M.G. in 1919. In 1908 he married Helen Mary, only daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel G. N. Atkinson, and they have one son and two daughters.

In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 24 Oct. 1902. From 23 March, 1906, to 22 March, 1916, he was employed with the Egyptian Army (3rd Class Medjidie and 3rd Class Order of the Nile). He was promoted to Major 12 Sept. 1914; was acting Lieut.-Colonel, commanding a service battalion Manchester Regt., 19 Feb. to 20 March, 1917, and 6 May, to 25 May, 1917; Temp. Lieut.-Colonel, commanding service battalion Manchester Regt., 26 May to 20 Dec. 1917; Temporary Colonel 21 Dec. 1917; promoted to Lieut.-Colonel 13 Sept. 1918. He was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 3 June, 1918. Lieut.-Colonel F. W. Woodward commands the 1st Loyal North Lancashire Regt. He has the Croix de Guerre and the Croce di Guerra.

BELLAMY, ROBERT, Lieut., was born 29 Nov. 1871, son of the late Colonel P. L. Bellamy, Border Regt. He was commissioned in the Royal Sussex Regt. 2 June, 1894, and became Lieutenant 8 April, 1896. He served in the South African War, 1900–2, as Adjutant, Royal Sussex Regt., 5 Oct. 1900 (and after the war to 4 Oct. 1904), and was present at operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including actions at Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July) and Ladybrand (2 to 5 Sept.). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Robert Bellamy, Lieut., Royal Sussex Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and the Insignia were presented by Major-General W. Meiklejohn at Ranikhet, India, 9 May, 1903. He became Captain 17 Sept. 1902; was Adjutant, Militia, and Adjutant, Special Reserve, 25 Oct. 1906, to 30 Sept. 1911; Brigade Major, South Lancashire Infantry Brigade, Western Command, 3 Oct. 1911, to 4 Aug. 1914; was promoted to Major 1 Nov. 1914; was Brigade Major, 1/1st South Lancashire Infantry Brigade, Central Force, Home Defence; Brigade Major, 172nd Infantry Brigade, Home Forces, 5 Aug. 1914, to 20 June, 1916; Temp. Lieut.-Colonel, commanding 13th Battn. Royal Sussex Regt., 31 July, to 5 Aug. 1916; Temp. Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Sussex Regt., 6 Aug. 1916, to 27 Aug. 1918, and 28 Aug. 1918. He married, in 1903, Constance Gwendoline, eldest daughter of the late Colonel Alfred Borton, Welsh Regt.

SKEFFINGTON SMYTH, GEOFFREY HENRY JULIAN, Lieut., was born at 42, Portman Square, London, W., 11 Dec. 1873, youngest son of the late E. Randal Skeffington Smyth, of Mount Henry, Portarlington, Ireland, Vice-Lieutenant for the Queen's County, late Lieutenant and Adjutant of the 28th Regt., in which he served and was wounded in the Crimean War. He was educated at the Rev. E. D. Stone's Preparatory School, at Stonehouse, Broadstairs, and at Eton College, and entered the 9th Lancers 29 May, 1895, becoming Lieutenant 4 July, 1896. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901, and was severely wounded. He took part in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin, Modder River and Magersfontein, and the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including action at Karee Siding; operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to Nov. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to Nov. 1900, including actions at Bethlehem and Wittebergen. It is believed that Lieut. Skeffington Smyth was recommended for the D.S.O. for acts of bravery in the field at the engagement at Quaggasfontein (Western Transvaal), when his troop of the 9th Lancers, together with a party of Kaffrarian Rifles, were heavily engaged, suffered severe losses, and were finally, at the end of the day, surrounded by the enemy, having run out of ammunition. No unwounded man was captured, however. Lieut. Skeffington Smyth received four wounds during the day, his leg being broken by the second one. He went back for and returned with ammunition under heavy fire (they were lying in the open within 600 yards of the enemy's position for some six hours or more), and he succoured the wounded under heavy fire. He says he doesn't know what he was mentioned in Despatches for, "unless it was for doing my duty as a 9th Lancer should." He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Geoffrey Henry Julian Skeffington Smyth, Lieut., 9th Lancers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented to him by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He was promoted to Captain 3 June, 1901, and retired 12 Dec. 1906. He became General Staff Officer, 1st Grade, and for his services during the European War was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 3 June, 1919. He was made Chevalier of the Legion of Honour by the French. "For the first 22 months of the present war," he says, "I was employed as G.S.O.3 and G.S.O.2 in the Military Operations (later Military Intelligence) Branch at the War Office. From June to Dec. I was on sick leave, and on 1 Feb. 1917, went to the Intelligence Staff, G.H.Q., British Armies in France. My pursuits before I received the wound, which broke my leg and prevented my riding to any extent, were those of hunting, shooting, polo and cricket, at none of which did I excel. I was a fair swordsman, and won second prize in the 'Sword v. Lance' competition at the Royal Military Tournament in 1896, a year after I joined the 9th Lancers. I owned my first motor-car in 1898." He married, in 1904, the Honourable Violet Frances Monckton, daughter of the 7th Viscount Galway, and Vere, Lady of Justice of the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, only daughter of Ellis Gosling, of Busbridge Hall, Godalming, Surrey, and they have three sons.

ORR, JOHN BOYD, Lieutenant, was born 16 Aug. 1871, only surviving son of the late Colonel Spencer Edward Orr, of Dullatur, Camberley, and of Mrs. Orr, now of Belfield, Camberley. He entered the Norfolk Regt. 18 Oct. 1893, and became Lieutenant 29 Aug. 1896. He was awarded the Royal Humane Society's Medal in 1894, for saving from drowning a woman who had attempted suicide by throwing herself into the river at Bishop's Bridge, Norwich. Lieut. Orr served in the South African War; was A.D.C. to the Brigadier Commanding the Mounted Infantry Brigade, South Africa, from Nov. 1900, to Oct. 1901, and saw a great deal of service. He took part in the Relief of Kimberley, and among the actions in which he fought were those at Paardeberg, Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Vet River, Zand River, Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "John Boyd Orr, Lieut., Norfolk Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He became Captain 25 Oct. 1901, and for two years from 1906 he was employed with the Transvaal Volunteers, and from May, 1910, to Dec. 1918, he was with the West African Frontier Force. He became Major in 1913. An obituary notice says: "A distinguished soldier is lost to the country in Major John Boyd Orr, D.S.O., 1st Battn. Norfolk Regt., who died on 24 Aug. 1914, from wounds received in action at the Battles of Mons."

S. J. B. Barnardiston.

GARVICE, CHUDLEIGH, Lieut., was born 12 Jan. 1875, at Cookham, Bucks, son of Charles and Elizabeth Garvice. His father was of course the famous novelist, of whom his friend, Mr. Douglas Sladen, writes as follows: "The late Charles Garvice, father of this distinguished soldier, was the most popular novelist of his time, and a great figure in the literary world. He was Chairman of the Authors' Club, one of the most prominent members of the Garrick, and Chairman of the Committee of the new After Dinner Club, of which he was co-founder with Mrs. Baillie-Reynolds and Mr. Douglas Sladen. He was the life and soul of the clubs to which he belonged, for, in addition to his sociability and wit in the smoking-room, he was an admirable after-dinner speaker, and when it was necessary for the club to assert itself on any occasion, he was always willing to take the responsibility, although it might make enemies. He was fearless in the performance of a duty. His multifarious activities may best be judged by quoting the last biography of him which appeared in 'Who's Who':

Chudleigh Garvice.

"'GARVICE, Charles, F.R.S.L., novelist, dramatist and journalist; correspondent for several English and American papers; President of Institute of Lecturers; late President of Farmers' and Landowner's Association; C.C. for Northam, Devon; Conservator of Rivers. Publications—Poem: Eve. Novels: Nance, Her Heart's Desire, The Outcast of the Family, A Coronet of Shame, Just a Girl, In Cupid's Chains, Love Decides, Linked by Fate, Love the Tyrant, A Girl of Spirit, Diana and Destiny, Where Love Leads, The Gold in the Gutter, In Wolf's Clothing, Queen Kate, The Scribbler's Club, Love in a Snare, Two Maids and a Man, The One Girl in the World, 1915. Plays: The Fisherman's Daughter, A Life's Mistake, part author of A Heritage of Hate, and Marigold comes to Town. Recreations: Riding, fishing, motoring, amateur farming.'

"His astonishing popularity as an author may be judged from the following facts: In the year 1913 alone 1,750,000 copies of his books were sold, and before the end of that year more than six million copies of his books had been sold.

"No literary man in England was more sincerely loved and respected: none had greater influence: none used it better. The secret of his extraordinary popularity as a writer was that his books were absolutely pure, absolutely sincere, extraordinarily sympathetic, and that he was a story-teller born. Charles Garvice was one of those men who do nothing but good wherever they go."

Chudleigh Garvice was educated at Blundell's School, Tiverton, and was gazetted to the Royal Dublin Fusiliers 9 Dec. 1896, and was promoted to Lieutenant 30 June, 1898. He served in the South African War from the commencement of hostilities until peace was signed, employed with Mounted Infantry, and was present at operations in Natal in 1899, including the action at Talana; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 22 Nov. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to July, 1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to Jan. 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Chudleigh Garvice, Lieut., Royal Dublin Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was promoted to Captain 28 May, 1902. In 1903 he served in the Aden Hinterland operations, and in the Sudan (Egyptian Army) from 1904 to 1912, in command of the Arab Battn. in various patrols, etc. (Sudan Medal, 1910); retired from the Royal Dublin Fusiliers 9 April, 1913, and became Major, Reserve of Officers, 31 Aug. 1914. In the Great War he served on the Western Front of Egypt in 1915–16, and later on the Staff in Egypt. Major Garvice was mentioned in the Despatches of General Maxwell, dated 1 March, 1916, and of General Allenby in the London Gazette, dated 15 Jan. 1918. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1919, and has the 1914–15 Star, the General Service Medal, the Victory Medal, the 4th Class Osmanieh, 3rd Class Order of the Nile, 1st Class Order of the Redeemer (Greece). SMITH, LEONARD KIRKE, Lieut., was born 24 Jan. 1877, at Cliffe House, near Sheffield, son of Francis Patrick Smith, of Barnes Hall, near Sheffield, and Margaret Scott Smith, his wife (deceased). He was educated at Charterhouse, and joined the Army 20 Feb. 1897, as a Second Lieutenant in the Royal Scots, becoming Lieutenant 22 April, 1899. He served in South Africa with the Mounted Infantry, 1899 to 1902, and was present at the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove and Dreifontein; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900, including actions at Colesberg (1 Jan. to 12, Feb.); operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, April, 1901, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 4 May, 1900, and 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Leonard Kirke Smith, Lieut., The Royal Scots. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented by the General Officer Commanding at Nagpore District at Full Parade, 4 April, 1903. He became Captain 9 May, 1903, and served as Adjutant, Royal Scots, 24 Nov. 1903, to 4 April, 1906, then being employed as Adjutant of Militia and of Special Reserve until 1 Jan. 1911. He served with the Egyptian Army from 23 March, 1911, onwards. Capt. Smith was, for a period in 1915, Temporary Major until promoted to substantive rank 1 Sept. 1915, and was Temporary Lieut.-Colonel from Sept. 1916, to June 1918. He was given the Brevet of Lieut.-Colonel 3 June, 1918. He has the 3rd Class Order of the Nile. He married, on 14 Aug. 1914, at Holy Trinity, Brompton, Vera, daughter of the late Capt. C. H. Hicks, Lancashire Fusiliers, and Mrs. Hicks, and granddaughter of the late Hicks Pasha, and they have two sons, Peter McKenzie, born 4 Aug. 1916, and Michael McKenzie, born 27 July, 1917.

ABADIE, EUSTACE HENRY EGREMONT, Lieut., was born 24 Jan. 1877, elder surviving son of the late Major-General Henry Richard Abadie, C.B., 9th Lancers, Lieut.-Governor of Jersey, 1900–4 (whose death occurred after that of his son), and of his first wife Kate (who died in 1883), daughter of G Sandeman. Eustace Abadie joined the 9th Lancers 11 Aug. 1897, becoming Lieutenant 3 May, 1899. He served with much distinction in the South African War, 1899–1902, and was present at the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Belmont, Enslin and Magersfontein; Relief of Kimberley; took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Karee Siding, Houtnek (Thoba Mountain), Vet River (5 and 6 May) and Zand River; was present during the operations in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June), again in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Reit Vlei and Belfast; in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900; operations in Cape Colony and the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with eight clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Eustace Henry Egremont Abadie, Lieut., 9th Lancers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa. The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented by General Sir Bindon Blood at Full Garrison Parade at Rawal Pindi 8 April, 1903. It is said that no other officer received more than eight clasps to the Queen's Medal in the South African Campaign. He was promoted to Captain 15 March, 1904; was a Staff College Graduate; was Adjutant of his regiment from Feb. 1906, to Aug. 1907, and was promoted to Major in March, 1912. The names of members of this distinguished family appear first in most books of reference. The first name in "The Last Post," a book containing biographies of officers who lost their lives in the South African War, was that of a cavalry officer named Abadie, namely, Lieut. H. B. Abadie. D.S.O., Major E. H. E. Abadie's eldest brother. Another brother, Capt. G. H. F. Abadie, late 16th Lancers, died of fever in Feb. 1904, at Kam, West Africa, where he was serving as Resident, after having taken part in the Kam Sokoto Campaign, and been created a C.M.G. Major-General Abadie, their father, also had a most distinguished military career of 46 years, and, as has been said, survived the last of these three gallant sons only for a short time. For Major Eustace Abadie's services in the Great War he was mentioned in Sir John French's Despatch of 14 Jan. 1915. He was at first officially reported to be a prisoner of war; but as no official confirmation of his death was received, and as nothing was heard of or from him since, it was assumed that he had lost his life in action at Messines in Oct. 1914.

FISHER, HAROLD, Lieut., was born 3 March, 1877, at Fulham, S.W., son of the Rev. Frederic Horatio Fisher, M.A., Hon. Canon of St. Albans, of Church Croft, Hemel Hempstead, and Agnes Jeune, daughter of John Jackson, Bishop of London. He was educated at Haileybury, and entered the Manchester Regt., from the Suffolk Artillery Militia, 4 May, 1898, becoming Lieutenant 6 May, 1899. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902, and took part in the operations in Natal, 1899, including actions at Elandslaagte and Lombard's Kop; Defence of Ladysmith (severely wounded), including action of 6 Jan. 1900; in Natal, March to June, 1900; in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); again in the Transvaal, 1901–2. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. 1902 (Sir G. S. White, 2 Dec. 1899, and 23 March, 1900), and London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order 29 Nov. 1900 [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Harold Fisher, Lieut., Manchester Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 12 May, 1902. He was promoted to Capt. 14 July, 1901. He was killed in in action 16 Dec. 1914, near La Bassée.

BOYALL, ALFRED MOREY, Lieut., was born 6 Oct. 1877, son of the late John Richard Boyall, of Ealing. He was educated at Harrow (The Park), 1891, and joined the Army as a Second Lieutenant in the West Yorkshire Regt. 16 Feb. 1898, becoming Lieutenant 28 May, 1899. He served in the South African War, taking part in the operations in Natal, 1899, and the Relief of Ladysmith with the action of Colenso; operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900; action at Spion Kop; operations of 5 to 7 Feb. 1900; action at Vaal Kranz; operations on Tugela Heights, and the action at Pieter's Hill, in which he was wounded; operations in Natal (including the action at Laing's Nek), March to June, 1900; operations east and west of Pretoria, in the Transvaal, July to 29 Nov. 1900, and in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was twice mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Feb. and 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's and King's Medals with seven clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Alfred Morey Boyall, Lieut., West Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 12 May, 1902. He had his captaincy 19 Jan. 1905, and between March, 1908, and March, 1912, was employed in the Militia, and in the Special Reserve as Adjutant. Capt. Boyall served again with distinction in the European War. After being employed as Staff Captain (March and April, 1915) and D.A.A.G. (April, 1915, to April, 1916) at the General Headquarters of the British Expeditionary Force, and becoming Brevet Major 1 Sept. 1915, he was Acting Lieut.-Colonel, West Yorkshire Regt., 1 Nov. 1916, to March, 1918. He was mentioned in Sir John French's Despatch of 15 Oct. 1915, dated War Office, 1 Jan. 1916. Mentioned in Sir Douglas Haig's Despatch, dated War Office, 15 June, 1916, and awarded a Bar to the Distinguished Service Order 4 Feb. 1918: "Alfred Morey Boyall, Acting Lieut.-Colonel, West Yorkshire Regt. When in command of an advanced guard battalion he pushed forward, after the capture of the first objective, and occupied a more advanced position, which was one of great importance, on his own initiative, His appreciation of the situation and display of bold initiative had considerable bearing on the success of the whole operations." He was given his Brevet Lieut.-Colonelcy 1 Jan. 1918. Lieut.-Colonel Boyall married, in 1905, Ida Mary Albina, daughter of Major-General Sykes.

LEGGETT, ARCHIBALD HERBERT, Lieut., was born in 1877, son of Major G. E. Leggett, late 77th Regiment of Foot. He was educated at Clifton College, and received his first commission in the Royal Scots Fusiliers 15 May, 1897. He served as Adjutant of the 2nd Battn. Royal Scots Fusiliers, 1899 to 1902, in the South African War, and was present at the Relief of Ladysmith, including the action at Colenso; operations of 17 to 24 Jan. 1900; operations of 5 to 7 Feb. 1900, and action at Vaal Kranz; operations on Tugela Heights (14 to 27 Feb.), and action at Pieter's Hill; operations in the Transvaal, May and June, 1900; operations in Natal, March and April, 1900; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Frederickstad (17 to 25 Oct.); operations in Cape Colony, north of Orange River; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902; was promoted Captain 25 Sept. 1901, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Archibald Herbert Leggett, Lieut., West Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902. Capt. Leggett was Instructor, Royal Military Academy, from 1903 to 1907, and served from 1908 to 1910 in Japan, being attached to the British Embassy at Tokio, 1909 to 1910, serving for six months with the 29th Regiment of Infantry, Imperial Japanese Army, and passing as a 2nd Class Interpreter in Japanese. He was Brigade Major of the Hampshire Infantry Brigade from 1911 to 1913, when he retired from the Service (19 June). He served in the European War from 1915 to 1918, commanding the 5th (Territorial) Battn. Royal Scots Fusiliers from 1915 to 1917, and the 156th Infantry Brigade from 1917 to 1919. He was awarded a Bar to the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 March, 1917]: "Archibald Herbert Leggett, D.S.O., Reserve of Officers, late Royal Scots Fusiliers. For conspicuous gallantry, coolness and resource when in command of an infantry battalion. He showed exceptional powers of leadership when attacked by the enemy, upon whom he inflicted a severe defeat." He was given the Brevets of Major 3 Jan. 1916, and of Lieut.-Colonel 1 Jan. 918; was created a C.M.G. in 1918; was four times mentioned in Despatches, and was awarded the Russian Order of St. Ann, 3rd Class, in 1916. On demobilization, 20 March, 1919, he was given the rank of Honorary Brigadier-General. Brigadier-General A. H. Leggett married, in 1903, Lilian Rose, eldest daughter of Major J. C. O'Neal, late Inniskilling Dragoons, and they have two sons and one daughter.

PRICE, CHARLES LEMPRIÈRE, Lieut., was the only child of Colonel Thomas Charles Price, of 8, Inverness Gardens, Kensington, W., late R.A., and his wife, Amy Earle, daughter of Charles Monteiro D'Almeida Lemprière, and grandson of Colonel Thomas Smith Price, H.E.I.C.S. (who received the Punjab Medal with clasps for Mooltan and Goojerat). He was born at Alderney, Channel Islands, 17 Sept. 1877. He was educated at St. Paul's School; privately, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst; gazetted Second Lieutenant, Royal Scots, 8 Sept. 1897, and promoted Lieutenant 29 June, 1899, and Capt. 3 Nov. 1903. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902; took part in operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900 including actions at Belfast (26–27 Aug.) and Lydenberg (5–8 Sept.); operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to Dec. 1901, and Feb. to 31 May, 1902; operations in Orange River Colony, Dec. 1901, to Feb. 1902; was Acting Provost-Marshal, Komati Poort, and afterwards Station Staff Officer (twice mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 20 Aug. and 10 Sept. 1901]; Queen's Medal with three clasps, and King's Medal with two clasps; awarded D.S.O. " for gallantry in leading an attack on the Boer position at Bermondsey, East Transvaal, 16 May, 1901 "). The award of his Distinguished Service Order was gazetted 27 Sept. 1901: " Charles Lemprière Price, Lieut., Royal Scots. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He served in the European War with the Expeditionary Force in France and Flanders from — Aug.; was appointed Adjutant at the Front, and was killed in action at Vailly on 16 Sept. following, during the Battle of the Aisne, while in command of the regiment. A brother officer wrote: " I was present at the Battle of Mons with him and also at Le Cateau, and in the trying retreat almost as far as Paris, during the whole of which he was indefatigable, cheery, doing the work of ten men, full of resource, regardless of danger, the bravest and finest man I have ever known or wish to know; in losing him we have lost our best, a great sportsman and staunch friend. He will be mourned by the whole regiment, by whom he was respected and beloved "; and Private P. Clancy, in describing his experiences during this time, said (" Dundee Advertiser "): " We met the Germans on 23 Aug. On the 26th we were nearly annihilated at Cambray owing to the French reinforcements not coming up. About 7.30 o'clock that morning one of our airmen descended and reported that the French were advancing about 20 miles off, and would be able to reinforce us about midday. We waited anxiously, but 12 o'clock came and no French, and five o'clock and still no French. Half an hour later Major Butler gave the order, ' Retire, men, for God's sake; every man for himself.' Shells were flying thick about us, and it was an awful order to give. We got the order all right, but, with a few exceptions, it did not reach the Gordons, with disastrous results to them. So we began the never-to-be-forgotten retreat, with shells and bullets flying about everywhere. We got into Einecourt. When we got between a church and a farmhouse we came across two women and a child. Pipe-Major Duff said he would stay behind and look after them. This he did, and we saw no more of them. Our Adjutant, Capt. Price, who was one of the finest and most popular of the officers, and who was on horseback, said to us, ' Keep your heads, men. There are no marked men here. If the bullets are going to hit you they will hit you.' The Gordons, 18th Royal Irish and 2nd Royal Scots were all together on the retreat, falling back as fast as they could. The last fight on the retreat was at St. Quentin, and then we fell back to Hams, within 24 kilometres of Paris. We blew up all the bridges and the roads as we retreated except one bridge, and upon that solitary bridge and for five miles beyond it 150 guns of the outer defences of Paris were trained. On came the massed forces of the Germans and started to cross the bridge. Out blazed the guns and the bridge was blown to bits, along with the Germans who were approaching and crossing it. Their losses were awful. But for us it was a terrible retreat, and I shall never forget it. Then came the turning movement. We were seventeen days and nights in the trenches at the Aisne without being relieved. It was a time of artillery duels. Here we lost Capt. Price, who had saved thousands of men at Cambray. He lost his life trying to save another's. One of our N.C.O.'s was wounded and began to yell. Capt. Price was in his bomb-proof dug-out when he heard the shouting, and he called out to the man, ' All right, man, I will be with you in a few minutes.' Just as he got out of the trench he was hit by a bit of shell, and died a few hours afterwards. His loss was deeply regretted, because he was beloved by everybody." At Mons, when the troops were in full retreat, men of many regiments hurrying down the road, and getting hopelessly mixed and out of hand, under heavy shell fire, he noticed some guns on a ridge, and succeeded in rallying some of his men in all that ghastly confusion, and holding the ridge for over an hour, while the guns were removed. Capt. Price was mentioned in F.M. Sir John (now Lord) French's Despatch of 8 Oct. 1914, " for gallant and distinguished service in the field." He had the Coronation Medal and was Past Grand Sword Bearer of England. In a speech at the Annual Dinner of the Royal Scots, Edinburgh Association (29 March, 1902), Colonel Douglas described how, during the Boer War, Capt. Price was recommended for the V.C. They attacked the Boers, said Colonel Douglas, in a very strong position at Bermondsey, their flanks being protected by precipices. It was a difficult position to turn. He sent Lieut. Dalmahoy with E Company to the left, and they were round the Boer's right in no time. The guns were in action at 1,600 yards. But E Company made the Boers bolt. Major Moir and Lieut. Dalmahoy went after them. Then the Boers took up a rear-guard position, and it was here that Major Moir got hit in five places. He (Colonel Douglas) sent Lieut. Price with a message to the firing line. When he reached it Corpl. Paul was in command. Lieut. Dalmahoy, Private Sheddon and another man were lying wounded about 50 yards in front of the firing line, which was 400 yards from the Boers. Then men had two of the small entrenching implements with them, and with these each scraped up a little earth in front of them. This was the only cover they had. Lieut. Price ran out, picked up the nearest of the three wounded men, and carried him in. He found it heavy work and called for three volunteers. Three young L.-Corpls., M'Gill, Miller and Smith, at once responded. He made them take off their equipment and coats, and did the same himself, and then unarmed and in shirt sleeves they ran out. Nevertheless, the Boers at once turned a heavy fire on them, and, in bringing in the wounded, one of the bearers was hit. Lieut. Dalmahoy was again hit in the head, and Private Sheddon was killed. Lord Kitchener promoted Corpl. Paul to Sergt. for his gallantry, and recommended Lieut. Price for the V.C., and the three young lance-corporals for Distinguished Conduct Medals.

BERKELEY, CHRISTOPHER ROBERT, Lieut., was born 18 Jan. 1877, son of the late Major Henry William Berkeley. He was educated at Oratory School, and at Sandhurst, and joined the Army as a Second Lieutenant in the Welsh Regt. 8 Sept. 1897, becoming Lieutenant 5 July, 1899. He served in the South African War from 1899 to 1902, and was present at the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg, and the actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein (severely wounded), Vet River and Zand River; operations in the Transvaal, May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria and Diamond Hill; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including action at Belfast; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902, serving from 14 April, 1902, as Assistant Provost-Marshal. assisting the battalion to withdraw at a very critical moment." He was also awarded the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1895, Emily Rose, widow of G. B. Long, J.P., of Wotton-under-Edge, Gloucestershire, and they have one daughter.

DE TRAFFORD, AUGUSTUS FRANCIS, Lieut., served in the South African War, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Augustus Francis de Trafford, Lieut., 3rd South Staffordshire Regt. For services during the recent operations in South Africa." He died in hospital after a lingering illness on 1 June, 1904. When a memorial to Lieut. de Trafford was unveiled, Colonel Raitt said of him: "Here, among those who knew him, there is no need for me to say he was a well-loved comrade. You all know that his amiability of disposition, straightforwardness, modesty, and charm of manner would have been sure to endear him to those around him. But we also call him a most gallant comrade, and to show you these words also are used in all sincerity, I would like to give you two instances of his conduct in action. In June and July, 1900, he was with a wing of the battalion under my command at a place called Willow Grange, near Ficksburg, in the Orange Free State. The enemy's position was two or three miles in front of us. The intervening ground was a plateau running from our position up to theirs. One day we went out to cut barbed wire from the farm fences in front that we required to strengthen our defences. The Boers came out and shot at us, but did no harm. Apart from the incident I am about to relate, it was an insignificant affair. I left Augustus de Trafford with half a company on a little kopje to our right rear, in order to prevent the Boers working round under cover of the edge of the plateau, to enfilade us. When we had got all the wire we needed, I rode back to the kopje where I could get a better view, in order to see when I could safely retire the covering parties. It appears that the Boers had tried to get round our flank, and were under cover in some rocks at the edge of the plateau about 300 or 400 yards away. I did not know they were there, and those at the kopje, no doubt thinking I knew, never told me. I saw two soldiers lying alone a short distance in front away from their section. I asked what they were doing, and said they were to be ordered to rejoin it. I never meant Augustus de Trafford himself to go to them. The next thing I saw was he walking quietly up to them. The Boers opened fire on him, they had the exact range, and the bullets were striking the ground all round. Horrified at the result of my order, I shouted to him to run. He would not run, but walked quietly up to them, gave them their orders, and returned. Every moment I expected to see him drop. Well, I think a man might be brave enough, and yet have run without even waiting to be told to do so. At this time he was a subaltern in the 3rd (Militia) Battalion, and there was some difficulty about getting his commission in the line. I had an opportunity some time after of relating this incident to the General, who at once interested himself in the matter, and got his commission. I think, therefore, we may fairly say he gained his commission by his gallantry in action. The next incident was related to me by Major Williams, of our battalion, who was himself afterwards killed in action, and by Major Going, who is here to-day. It occurred with the Mounted Infantry near Vereeniging, in the Southern Transvaal, in July, 1901. They were being closely pressed by a very superior force of Boers; de Trafford's section, which was out in front, was ordered to fall back to a ridge, where the remainder of the regiment were. While they were doing so, he saw Major Williams' horse shot. He at once rode up to him and begged him to take his. Major Williams refused, and told him to go on after his section. He would not, and before Major Williams could persuade him to do so his horse also was shot. The Boers were right on to them, and they were surrounded and captured. Major Williams reported this incident, and it gained him the Distinguished Service Order."

Augustus F. de Trafford.

POORE, ROGER ALVIN, Lieut., was born 3 July, 1870, at Bath, son of Robert Poore, formerly Major, 6th Hussars, and Juliana Benita Poore, daughter of the late Rear-Admiral Sir Armar Lowry Corry, K.C.B., and Lady Corry (née Massy Dawson). Roger Alvin Poore, then a Lieutenant in the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry, volunteered for the South African War, and was appointed to the Mounted Infantry Company of the Yorkshire Light Infantry (3rd Mounted Infantry) 17 Nov. 1899, and served with them in all engagements from Belmont 23 Nov., Graspan 25 Nov., Modder River 30 Nov., Magersfontein 11 Dec., the Relief of Kimberley, Paardeberg, etc., to the Battle of Diamond Hill on the 11th and 12th June, 1900. His horse was shot under him at Sanna's Post, and, in another engagement, a bullet passed through his helmet. Soon after Diamond Hill he was appointed District Magistrate, when, in the performance of his duties, "he was regarded as the soul of honour and uprightness, and a loyal, genuine friend," by both Boers and English. His Commanding Officer, Lieut.-Colonel Pilcher, wrote on 19 Dec. 1900: "I can think of no officer who has seen more, or as much, fighting as Lieut. Poore has done. I have on more than one occasion sent forward his name for honourable mention; I know no better patrol leader. He was on one occasion called out and thanked by Major-General Hutton for his good work. He is an excellent Mounted Infantry Officer." Lieut. Poore (then Captain) was mentioned in Lord Roberts's Supplementary Despatches 10 Sept. 1901. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Roger Alvin Poore, Lieut., Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." In 1911 Major Poore received the Coronation Medal. On the 11th Jan. 1915, he was appointed to the command of the 2/1st Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry, and, in the Supplement to the London Gazette, War Office, 24 Feb. 1917, the name of (Temporary) Lieut.-Colonel R. A. Poore is (with those of other officers) mentioned as having been brought before the Secretary of State for War "for valuable services rendered in connection with the war." In Feb. he was transferred to the 2nd Battn. Royal Welsh Fusiliers, and served with them till he was killed in action on 26 Sept. 1917. His Colonel, writing to Mrs. Poore, said: "There is one thing that you will hear with pride, and that is, that the battalion under your husband's command behaved most gallantly in the action and has covered itself with glory. Your husband has endeared himself to everybody in the battalion, and his loss will be most acutely felt. He had helped and supported me most loyally; indeed, I do not know how I will get on without his wise advice. He was one of the most gallant gentlemen I have ever met." Brigadier-General Mayne (of the 33rd Division) wrote, 2 Oct. 1917: "He" (Major Poore) "was so keen and enthusiastic about anything he did, and he set such a fine example by his devotion to duty and strength of character. The last time I saw him (25 Sept.) he was moving up with his battalion to the front line, full of enthusiasm and a splendid example to his officers and men." Major Poore was a splendid horseman, an excellent shot with both rifle and gun, and very keen on every kind of sport. At the Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall in 1899, the only time he competed, he won First Prize for "Sabre v. Sabre." "The best of friends, the most gallant of men; an awful loss for all, and their name is legion, and for the country he served so well." He married, on 9 Dec. 1913, Lorne Margery, daughter of Major Richard James William Dennistoun and Mrs. Despard, of Hamilton, and their children were Lorne Heather Dennistoun, born 23 Dec. 1914 (died 22 Feb. 1915), and Roger Hamilton Poore, born 19 Aug. 1916.

Roger Alvin Poore.

WILSON, CLIVE HENRY ADOLPHUS, Lieut., was born in 1876, and is the third son of the late Arthur Wilson, of Tranby Croft. He served in the South African War, 1900 to 1902, with the Imperial Yeomanry and Damant's Horse, and was severely wounded. He was mentioned in Despatches twice [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901, and 25 April, 1902]; received the Queen's and King's Medals with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Clive Wilson, Lieut., 12th Battn. Imperial Yeomanry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He retired from the East Riding of Yorkshire Yeomanry 6 Dec. 1902, and was given the honorary rank of Captain. He was a Director of Thomas Wilson and Company, Hull, the United Shipping Company, London, and of Story, Smithson and Company, Hull, and was Master of the Holderness Hounds. He married, in 1907, Elvira, daughter of the late Signor Magherim, of Florence.

THYNNE, ULRIC OLIVER, Lieut., was born in London 6 July, 1871, son of Lord Henry Frederick Thynne (son of the Marquis of Bath) and Lady Ulrica Thynne, daughter of the 12th Duke of Somerset. He was educated at Charterhouse and Sandhurst, and entered the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry as a Second Lieutenant. He took part in the operations in Chitral with the Relief Force in 1895 (Medal with clasp), and served in South Africa in 1900 with the Imperial Yeomanry. In this campaign he was a Special Service Officer, and afterwards Brigade-Major, Rhodesian Field Force; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Ulric Oliver Thynne, Lieut., Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry Cavalry (Rhodesian Field Force). In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 2 June, 1902. Lieut.-Colonel U. O. Thynne served in the European War from 1914 to 1918, and was created a C.M.G. in 1918. He married, in London 16 May, 1899, Marjory, daughter of Edward Wormald, of 15, Berkeley Square, and they have four children: Oliver St. Maur, born 24 Oct. 1901; Edward Wormald, born 17 March, 1905; Brian Sheridan, born 29 Nov. 1907, and Ulrica Marjory, born 5 May, 1911.

DICKSON-POYNDER, SIR JOHN POYNDER (LORD ISLINGTON), Bart., Lieut., was born in 1866. He assumed the name of Poynder on succeeding to his maternal uncle's property in 1881, and succeeded his uncle as 6th Baronet (created 1802) in 1884. He was educated at Harrow and Christ Church, Oxford; was a Member of the London County Council for St. George's, Hanover Square, from 1898 to 1904, and Conservative Member of Parliament for the Chippenham Division of Wiltshire, 1892 to 1910. He joined the Royal Wiltshire Yeomanry, and served in the South African War with the Imperial Yeomanry, taking part in operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, including actions at Zilikat's Nek, Elands River (4 to 6 Aug.) and Venterskroon (7 to 9 Aug.); operations in Orange River Colony, including actions at Lindley (1 to 26 June) and Rhenoster River. For his services he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept, 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Sir John Poynder Dickson-Poynder, Bart., Lieut., 1st Battn. Imperial Yeomanry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He retired from the Royal Scots, and subsequently from the Wiltshire Yeomanry. In 1910 he became 1st Baron Islington, and was Governor of New Zealand from 1910 to 1912, becoming Honorary Colonel of the 9th New Zealand Mounted Rifles, March, 1911; became a Privy Councillor and K.C.M.G. in 1911 and G.C.M.G. in 1913. Lord Islington was Under Secretary of State for the Colonies from 1914 to 1915, and Parliamentary Under Secretary for India from 1915 to 1918. He married, in 1896, Anne, daughter of R. H. D. Dundas and Catherine Anne, daughter of the 2nd Baron Napier of Magdala, and they have one daughter.

FLETCHER, WILLIAM ALFRED LITTLEDALE, Lieut., was born at Childwall 25 Aug. 1869, son of Alfred Fletcher, J.P., D.L. He was educated at Eton, and Christ Church, Oxford (Eton Eight, 1890; Oxford "Blue" for Rowing, 1890–1893); served in the South African War with the 2nd Battn. Imperial Yeomanry from 1899 to 1900. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "William Alfred Littledale Fletcher, Lieut., Imperial Yeomanry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 29 Oct. 1901. He again saw service in the European War from 1914 to 1918, receiving for his services the Brevet of Major, three mentions in Despatches, and the Legion of Honour. He died 14 Feb. 1919. The late Major Fletcher, besides being a great oarsman, went in for big game shooting, and had travelled considerably. He was world-famous as an oarsman, coach, umpire, and a member of important rowing committees. He gained the highest honours in rowing, first appearing at Henley in the Eton College Eight of 1888, which beat Radley, but went under to Pembroke College, Cambridge, in the semi-final of the Ladies' Plate. In the following year he was at 7 in the Christ Church, Oxford Crew, which won the Leander Plate and Thames Cup, and he rowed for the College in 1890 in the same two events unsuccessfully. In the next year he was at 6 in the powerful Leander Eight, stroked by C. W. Kent, which won the Grand Challenge Cup and beat record against London in the final, and was also in the final for the Goblets, being partnered by F. Wilkinson, and losing to Lord Ampthill and Guy Nickalls by a foot only. In 1892 he was again in the winning Leander Eight for the Grand, and won the Goblets with Vivian Nickalls. His record in the University Boat Race was the very brilliant one of four successive wins. He stroked the winning Oxford crew in 1890; was at 7 to Kent in 1891; at 6 to C. M. Pitman in 1892, and to M. C. Pilkington in 1893. In addition Colonel Fletcher has done splendid service for rowing in coaching, by umpiring at Henley, and by his work on the committee of management of Henley Regatta, and on the committee of the Amateur Rowing Association.

William A. L. Fletcher.

His death caused widespread regret, and some obituary notices of him read as follows:

"We regret to announce that Lieut.-Colonel William Alfred Littledale Fletcher, D.S.O., the Oxford Rowing Blue and coach, died of broncho-pneumonia yesterday at Allerton, Liverpool, aged 49. The name of W. A. L. Fletcher is classical in the literature of rowing. There are many who would say that he was the finest of all heavy-weight oarsmen, and certainly among the welter-weights there are not half a dozen names that could possibly be classed with his. The eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Fletcher, he was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford. His prowess as an oarsman was not so remarkable at Eton as at Oxford, but he rowed in the Eton crew of 1888 for the 'Ladies.' In Jan. 1889, he went up to Oxford, and thenceforward developed very rapidly in weight and strength, besides improving out of knowledge as an oarsman. In the summer of 1889 he rowed '7' in the Christ Church eight, which won both the Ladies' Plate and the Thames Cup at Henley. This was followed by a remarkable success in the spring of 1890, when he stroked the Oxford crew, which beat Cambridge after four successive Cambridge victories. The tide of success in the University Boat Race had turned, and Oxford won for nine years consecutively, in the first four of which Mr. Fletcher was a mainstay of the Oxford crew. He rowed stroke in 1890 (at the record weight for the thwart of 13st.), '7' in 1891, and '6' in 1892 and 1893. As a '6' he was undoubtedly at his best. It is regarded by many as the most important position in the boat, and certainly a big man at '6,' who is also a superlatively good oar, can 'make' a crew to an extent that is not possible even at stroke or '7.' Mr. Fletcher rowed in many very good crews and contributed greatly to their excellence. He also rowed in several college crews of fair standard that would have been of decidedly poor class without him. With Mr. Fletcher at '6' it would hardly have been possible for an eight, after a reasonable period of training, to be a bad one. His record of victories is not so remarkable as that of several oarsmen of less calibre, but they were nearly all victories of the very first class. A period of comparatively few years covers his rowing career, and during that period he never entered for more than two events in any one regatta at Henley. In the races for which he entered he was almost invariably victorious. He won 'the Grand' on every occasion on which he rowed for it—namely, in the Leander crews of 1891, 1892 and 1893. In 1891 he was beaten in the final for 'the Goblets,' but in both the two following years, partnered by Mr. V. Nickalls, he won the event handsomely. This pair was probably the fastest that ever rowed at Henley. It may be added that the Leander eights of 1891 and 1893 were of exceptional excellence, and that the former won the final in record time. Subsequently, Mr. Fletcher became famous as a coach. He trained and coached many Cambridge as well as Oxford crews with conspicuous success. His oarsmanship was remarkable for its length and power, and in hardly less degree for its smooth and finished style. Added to a long reach and vast strength, Mr. Fletcher showed indomitable pluck and was possessed of great stamina. He was a man of strong and virile character, but, none the less, universally popular. Several years of his life were devoted to world-wide travel, which included an expedition into Tibet. In the South African War he won the D.S.O., and in the later stages of the present war he commanded the 2/6th (Rifles) King's Liverpool Regt. in France."

"The great oarsman and coach, Lieut.-Colonel W. A. L. Fletcher, D.S.O., died yesterday, a few hours after he had been elected chairman of the Henley Regatta Management Committee. He stroked the Oxford eight to victory against Cambridge in 1890, rowed '7' in the winning boat in 1891, and was '6' in the winning boats in 1892 and 1893."

"The rowing record of Colonel W. A. L. Fletcher, D.S.O., who died of pneumonia yesterday, is inscribed among the classics of sport. His other leading interest in life is less well known—he was an enthusiastic traveller. One of his journeys was an expedition into Tibet, in which he got within 43 miles of Lhassa. As might be expected, he made a fine soldier—his dauntless courage, his great power of physical endurance, and his determined character soon lifted him into the ranks of the first-class fighting men. He won his D.S.O. in the South African War for a splendid resistance put up by himself and a force reduced to 16 men, who barricaded themselves in a beleaguered house at Hamelfontein, and held out for the best part of a day and all night."

POWER, WILLIAM SAYER, Lieut., was born 2 Jan. 1859, son of the late William Power, of Bramcote. He served in the South African War, with the Imperial Yeomanry, from 1899 to 1900, and was present in operations in Orange River Colony, May to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Biddulphsberg, Lindley (1 June), Rhenoster River, Lindley (26 June), Bethlehem (6 and 7 July), Wittebergen (1 to 29 July) and Witpoort; operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899 to 1900. He was wounded; mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "William Sayer Power, Lieut., 4th Battn. VENNING, GORDON RALPH, Second Lieut., was born 3 June, 1880, the eldest son of Alfred Reid Venning, of Straits Settlements, and 15, Springfield Place, Bath. He was gazetted to the Royal Artillery, as Second Lieutenant, 23 Dec. 1898, and served in the South African War. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order 29 Nov. 1900 [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Gordon Ralph Venning, Second Lieut., Royal Horse and Royal Field Artillery. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was killed in action 7 March, 1902, near Tweebosch, South Africa, on the occasion of Lord Methuen's capture by Delarey, aged 20. The rearguard of Methuen's force consisted of inexperienced irregular troopers, and these, when charged by a large body of Boers, took to flight. After this the handful of men who stood their ground were left in a hopeless position. The two guns of the 38th Battery were overwhelmed by the Boers, every man being killed or wounded, including Lieut. Nesham, "who acted up to the highest traditions of his corps." The infantry, however, though few in number, were seasoned troops, and they fought for some hours against overwhelming odds. "Two hundred of the Northumberland Fusiliers" (wrote Sir A. Conan Doyle) "lay round the wagons, and held the Boers off from their prey. With them were the two remaining guns, which were a mark for a thousand Boer riflemen. It was while encouraging by his presence and example the much-tried gunners of this section that the gallant Methuen was wounded by a bullet which broke the bone of his thigh. Lieut. Venning and all the detachment fell with their General round the guns."

SWAYNE, OSWALD ROCKE, Second Lieut., was born 25 Sept. 1879, sixth son of R. A. Swayne, of Tillington Court, near Hereford. He was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1918. Lieut.-Colonel A. A. Goschen married, in 1908, Marjorie Mary, daughter of the late Lieut.-Colonel W. Blacker, of Castle Martin, Newbridge, co. Kildare. He received two Bars to his D.S.O.

Arthur Alec Goschen.

FLANAGAN, EVELYN BRANSCOMBE, Second Lieut., was born 19 March, 1881. He served in the South African War from 1899 to 1901, for which he was mentioned in Despatches, received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Evelyn Branscombe Flanagan, Second Lieut., 4th Cheshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 17 Dec. 1901. He subsequently joined the 10th Gurkhas, Indian Army.

BUCHAN, ERNEST NORMAN, Second Lieut., was born in Hampshire 15 Feb. 1879, third son of the late Colonel H. P. Buchan, of Lockyer House, Plymouth, and of his wife, St. Clair, daughter of General Ireland, Governor of Singapore. Mrs. H. P. Buchan formerly lived in Jersey. Ernest Norman Buchan was educated at Mannamead School, Plymouth; joined the Militia (3rd East Lancashire Regt.), in which he served for one year and a hundred days; was gazetted as Second Lieut. to the Manchester Regt. from the Militia 4 May, 1901; was promoted to Lieut., Manchester Regt., 27 Nov. 1901, and to Capt., Manchester Regt., 1 Dec. 1912. Capt. Buchan served in the South African War from 1899 to 1902; as Acting Transport Officer from 20 April, 1900, taking part in the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including the action at Karee Siding and the operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]; received the Queen's South African Medal with three clasps, the King's South African Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 27 Sept. 1901]: "Ernest Norman Buchan, Second Lieut., 3rd East Lancashire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested with the Insignia of the Distinguished Service Order by His Majesty King Edward VII. on the 24th of Oct. 1902. From 12 Sept. 1904, to 2 Dec. 1904, he was Garrison Adjutant, Straits Settlements, Singapore, and he was subsequently stationed at Secunderabad and in the Punjab. On the 25th of Sept. 1914, he proceeded to France, being appointed Brigade Major, 27th Brigade, 11th Division, in Aug. 1915. He was killed in action, during the Battle of Loos, at the Quarries, Hulloch, on the 25th of Sept. following. At first he was only said to be "missing," but was later "presumed to have been killed." Capt. Buchan was mentioned in Despatches by Field-Marshal Sir John (now Lord) French [London Gazette, 1 Jan. 1916], for gallant and distinguished service in the field. He married, at Singapore, Kythe Elizabeth Graeme, daughter of William Graeme St. Clair, of Singapore, and had two sons: Philip William, born 12 Aug. 1905, and Norman Ireland, born 24 April, 1907, both at Wellington, Nilgiri Hills, India.

Brownlee, Chief Magistrate, Native Territories, Cape Province, and they have two sons: John Francis Brownlee and Edward Stephen; and a daughter, Joan Brownlee.

LEFROY, BERTRAM PERCEVAL, Lieut., was born 18 May, 1878, in London, son of the late Thomas Charles Perceval Lefroy, of 11, Ashburn Place, S.W., and Isabella Napier, daughter of the late Alexander Hastie, of Carnock, Fifeshire. He was educated at Harrow and Sandhurst, and joined the Royal Dublin Fusiliers 7 May, 1898; became Lieutenant 10 May, 1899. He served in the South African War, 1899–1901 (dangerously wounded); was present at the Relief of Ladysmith; took part in the operations in the Transvaal in June, 1900; in Natal, March to June, 1900, including action at Laing's Nek (6 to 9 June); in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July, 1900; in Orange River Colony, June, 1900; in the Transvaal, Dec. 1900, to Aug. 1901; also during the operations on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Sept. 1901, including defence of Fort Itala. He was mentioned in Despatches 11 Oct. 1901; received the Queen's South African Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Oct. 1901]: "Bertram Perceval Lefroy, Lieut., The Royal Dublin Fusiliers." The D.S.O. was awarded "for gallantry in the Defence of Forts Prospect and Itala." The defence of the two forts, though so few were engaged, was considered one of the most brilliant affairs in the war, the attacking force being about four times the number of the defenders, and the Boer loss larger in proportion than in almost any other action. Major Chapman was in command at Fort Itala. Lieut. Lefroy (with Lieut. Kane, South Lancashire Regt., who was killed) commanded about 90 of the Mounted Infantry at the outpost on the top of Itala Hill. He himself shot Potgieter, the enemy commander, and was very severely wounded. Lord Kitchener himself sent in Lieut. Lefroy's name for the D.S.O., and for his promotion, in getting which he was transferred to the 3rd Battn. The Royal Warwickshire Regt. The latter eventually proved in some ways unfortunate, as this battalion was one of those subsequently done away with, and caused Capt. Lefroy a serious loss of seniority. The following is an extract from a letter written by Lieut. B. P. Lefroy while he was lying wounded after Itala (he had been wounded in four places, two of which just escaped being fatal): "When we heard that we were going to be attacked at Itala, I was sent right up to the top of the Itala Hill with about 90 men, to try and hold it, and prevent the Boers from attacking the camp from that direction. At about 2 a.m., 26 Sept., they attacked my post five or six hundred strong. It was fairly dark, and the ground was covered with little rocks, which made it very hard to distinguish people. We kept up a heavy fire on both sides. They worked right round our right, and then rushed the position. It was a very plucky rush, but as they were about five to one, we couldn't keep them out, and it ended in a sort of grand mêlée. I have a vivid recollection of popping off my revolver with Boers all round me, and then I got too full of lead to continue the operation. They took about 37 prisoners and held the position all day. We people with bullets in us had to lie all day on our backs in the sun, and we didn't get down again till 3 a.m. next morning, when the people in the camp, finding the Boers had cleared, sent up for us. It was bitterly cold during the night, and a damp mist. The camp held out splendidly all night and day, until the Boers didn't think it worth while losing any more men. There were about 1,500 Boers, and about 300 of us, so we didn't do so badly." He became Captain 2 Aug. 1902. After the Boer War, he served in England, Gibraltar, again in South Africa, returned to England, and went through the Staff College. At the outbreak of the Great War he was holding an appointment as General Staff Officer at the War Office. In Aug. 1914, he went out on the Staff of the First Division. After seven months he returned to England to serve on the Staff of the 26th Division at Warminster until July, 1915, when he went out to command the 2nd Battn. Warwickshire Regt. He was made Brevet Major in the King's Birthday Honours List, 1915; Major 8 Aug. and Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Sept. 1915. Lieut.-Colonel Lefroy was fatally wounded at the Battle of Loos 25 Sept. 1915, and died in the Field Ambulance on the 27th. He was three times mentioned in Despatches during the War (17 Sept. 1914; 14 Jan. 1915 and 31 May, 1915); received the Cross of the Legion of Honour. He was much beloved by his men, and they would have followed him anywhere. The dying message he left for them was made a battalion order, and will not be forgotten by those of the old regiment who survive. It was: "Tell them my last thoughts are with them. I pray that their bravery in the hour of severe testing may win them through to success. Would to God I had been spared to serve and lead them a little longer. But as it is I trust that the men of the Warwickshire Regiment will pull together, work together and uphold the credit, the good name and the traditions that the Regiment has so nobly won. May God's blessing rest on them in their hour of danger or peace, and may the heroic self-sacrifice of their officers, non-commissioned officers and men who have fallen inspire them to deeds of unfaltering and unfailing bravery."

LICHTENBURG, JOHN WILLS, Lieut., was born 19 June, 1872, and joined the Army on 21 April, 1900, as a Second Lieutenant in the 18th Hussars; became Lieutenant 1 May, 1901. He served in the South African War, 1899–1902 (severely wounded). Took part in the operations in the Transvaal, Dec. 1900, to Sept. 1901, and Nov. 1901, to 31 May, 1902; in Orange River Colony, March and May, 1902; also during the operations on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Sept. and Oct. 1901; he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Oct. 1901]: "John Wills Lichtenburg, Lieut., 18th Hussars. For gallantry in action on Oliphant's River (Maseppa Drift) 30 June, 1901. Dated 30 July, 1901." The Insignia were presented by the King 24 Oct. 1902. He was promoted Captain on 29 Nov. 1904. Capt. Lichtenburg died 15 March, 1912.

CLEMENTI-SMITH, EUGENE, Lieut., was born 3 Dec. 1847, at the Rectory, Buckhurst Hill, Chigwell, Essex, eighth son of the Rev. John Smith, M.A., Rector of Buckhurst Hill, and Cecilia Susanna Clementi, daughter of Muzio Clementi. He was educated at St. Paul's School, London, and joined the Winnipeg Field Battery in 1871, and in 1872 "undertook the reorganization of the Manitoba Rifle Association, and was elected the first vice-president and chief executive officer, in which capacity he served till he left Winnipeg for the North-West Territories in 1878. In 1874 he won the championship of his province, and in 1875 the Governor-General's (Lord Dufferin) silver medal and the gold medal of the D.A.G." ("Volunteer Record," 5 Oct. 1895.) Capt. Clementi-Smith was High Commissioner (H.M. Civil Service), and J.P. of Brandon, Manitoba, where, in 1882 he again organized a Rifle Association, of which he was elected president, and in which he won grand aggregate medals in 1884 and 1885. In the latter year he was instrumental in assisting to raise the Manitoba Grenadier Regt. for active service, under General Middleton, in the Reil Rebellion, and in this regiment he held the commission of First Lieutenant, and served throughout the campaign, receiving the War Medal (N.W. Canada) in recognition of his services. He was mentioned in General Middleton's Despatches, 1887; returned to England, and in 1890 joined the Middlesex Yeomanry, having passed the Hythe School to qualify for the position of Instructor of Musketry to the corps. While connected with the regiment he took part in most of the National Rifle Association's meetings at Bisley, where for several years in succession he shot his way into the "Queen's Hundred." He also shot at Darnley, Altcar and Belfast, winning many cups and medals. He was champion of the South London Rifle Club in 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898, and on the 30th April of the last-named year he made a record score in a friendly match on the Runnemede Range—the highest possible at 200, 500 and 600 yards, 21 bull's-eyes in all. As Hon. Secretary to the Middlesex Rifle Association for six years, his work should not be forgotten. From a state of bankruptcy he raised the Association to a sound financial position, with a large credit balance. During the last two years he freely bestowed his time and skill on the coaching of recruits, personally superintending the weekly "spoon shoots" at Bisley, which he organized in connection with the Association. On 27 Feb. 1901, he was gazetted as a Second Lieutenant in the Imperial Yeomanry, sailing for the front on 8 March, with the temporary rank of Captain and Adjutant. He was attached to the 8th Division (General Rundle), and remained on active service till his death. His work was so successful that on one occasion in June a complimentary message was heliographed from Lord Kitchener, and was followed by a personal interview with General Rundle, who said: "I have heard a great deal about your exploits and the keen interest you take in all your military duties. I have wanted to see you and thank you for your work at Bethlehem. I have consulted with Colonel Firman, and intend to give you a much freer hand in future, and you will have a party of Scouts, the selection being in your hands. I hope to increase your command in the near future." It was while leading "Clementi's Scouts" (nearly all Middlesex men) on trek from Bethlehem to Harrismith, and defending a position that was being attacked, that Capt. Clementi-Smith received, on 11 Sept., the severe wound in the right shoulder which afterwards proved fatal. He died 4 Oct. 1901, aged 54. In the London Gazette of 11 Oct. 1901, is the announcement of his creation to a Companionship of the Distinguished Service Order: "Eugene Clementi-Smith, Lieut., Imperial Yeomanry. For extreme gallantry in action at Harrismith (since died of wounds)." In Lord Kitchener's Despatch, published in the "Times" of Wednesday, 4 Dec., there is the following paragraph: "11th Imperial Yeomanry.—Lieut. E. Clementi-Smith (since died of wounds), on 11 Sept. 1901, in Harrismith district, advanced alone to occupy a position Boers were making or, and though wounded through right shoulder, continued to fire from left, keeping enemy off till he was reinforced. Awarded D.S.O. by War Office Telegram No. 9599, dated 9 Oct. 1901." His father was formerly Head Master of Mercers' School and Chaplain of the Company. Lieut. Clementi-Smith was educated at the Mercers' School, and his brother, the Rev. P. Clementi-Smith (Rector of St. Andrew's Church, Doctors' Commons, London, E.C.), as House Warden of the Mercers' Company, had the responsibility of arranging for the Memorial erected by the Mercers' Company in their Chapel to Lieut. Clementi-Smith, Lieut. J. S. Watney and Private F. J. Dubois. The N.R.A. have gold, silver and bronze medals which are shot for annually, as a memorial of Lieut. Clementi-Smith's work in the interests of rifle-shooting. He married, on 23 Nov. 1881, at St. Jude's Church, Southsea, Wilhelmina Maria Barnes, daughter of James Barnes, Esq., and their daughter is Lilian Clementi, born at Brandon, Manitoba, Canada, 28 Aug. 1883. She married Major A. M. Matthews, R.G.A.

London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901.—"War Office, 10 Dec. 1901. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following . . . appointments to the Distinguished Service Order . . . in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the operations in China. These rewards to bear the date of 29 Nov. 1900."

HOLMAN, HERBERT CAMPBELL, Capt., was born 3 May, 1869, son of the late William Laban Holman, of Murree, Punjab. He was educated at Dulwich and Sandhurst. He entered the Army 21 Sept. 1889, as a Second Lieutenant in the Devonshire Regt.; was promoted Lieutenant 25 March, 1891, and was transferred to the Indian Staff Corps 3 May, 1892. He served in Burma, 1891–2, with the Wuntho Expedition (slightly wounded). He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 9 Feb. 1892]; took part in the operations of the Irrawaddy Column, as Staff Officer (Medal with clasp). He became Captain 21 Sept. 1900. He served in China, 1900, as First Class Officer Interpreter and Special Service Officer, graded as D.A.A.G., and for his services was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1905]; received the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "Herbert Campbell Holman, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during operations in China." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India, and presented by him 23 April, 1902. He was Assistant Secretary, Military Department, Government of India, 27 May to 14 Aug. 1901; was Staff Captain, Intelligence Department, War Office, 29 Dec. 1902, to 20 Jan. 1904; D.A.Q.M.G., General Staff, 21 Jan. 1904, to 28 Dec. 1906; Attaché with the Russian Forces in Manchuria 17 June to 7 Nov. 1905 (Order of St. Stanislaus, 2nd Class with Swords, and Russian War Medal); was awarded the Humane Society's Medal, 1907; became Major 21 Sept. 1907; was G.S.O.2, Army Headquarters, India, 11 March to 21 Oct. 1910, and from 1 July, 1913; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 20 June, 1914. Lieut.-Colonel H. C. Holman served in the European War from 1914 to 1918. He held a special appointment with the Indian Army Corps, B.E.F., from 12 Oct. 1914, to 29 Jan. 1915; was A.Q.M.G., 1st Army, B.E.F., 30 Jan. to 3 Nov. 1915; was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel 21 Sept. 1915; Temporary Brigadier-General 4 Nov. 1915, to 12 Nov. 1916, while D.A. and Q.M.G. 11th Army Corps. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 1 Jan. 1916. From 13 Nov. 1916, he was Temporary Major-General (promoted to substantive rank 1 Jan. 1919), as D.A. and Q.M.G., 4th Army in France, until 15 May, 1919, and on 22 May, 1919, became Head of the British Military Mission in South Russia. He was mentioned in Despatches seven times; was awarded the Legion of Honour; was made a C.M.G. in 1915, and a C.B. in 1918, and was wounded. He married, in 1902, Annie Ethel Talbot, second daughter of Major-General W. Howey, and they have one son and one daughter.

Herbert C. Holman.

LOCH, STEWART GORDON, Lieut., was born 13 April, 1873, at Ajmir, Rajputana, India, son of Capt. Robert Gordon Loch (deceased), late 20th Hussars and Indian Staff Corps. He was educated at Westward Ho!; Merchant Taylors' School, and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich; joined the Royal Engineers, 10 Jan. 1893, as Second Lieutenant; was sent out to India in 1895, and served with the 2nd Q.V.O. Sappers and Miners until May, 1904. He became Lieutenant 10 Feb. 1896; served in the China Campaign of 1900–1, as Assistant to Field Engineer (Telegraphs); was present at the Relief of Pekin, and in the action at Peitsung. He received the Medal with clasp for the Relief of Pekin; was mentioned in General Gaselee's Despatch, dated 17 Jan. 1901 [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901], and for his services in this campaign was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "Stewart Gordon Loch, Lieut., Royal Engineers." He was invested by the King 17 Feb. 1901. He became Captain 10 Feb. 1904; passed through the Indian Staff College, 1905–7; served at Army Headquarters, Simla, as G.S.O., 2nd Grade, from July, 1907, to 30 Sept. 1911; was Brigade Major, Dehra Dun Brigade, 1 Oct. 1911, to 14 Sept. 1913; was given the Brevet of Major 21 Feb. 1912; became Major 10 Feb. 1913; was G.S.O., 2nd Grade, Bannu Brigade, from 15 Sept. 1913, until 18 Dec. 1914. He served in the European War; was Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel; G.S.O.1, Army Headquarters, India, from 9 Dec. 1914, until 6 July, 1916; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1917; was Temporary Brigadier-General, General Staff, Northern Army, India, from 17 July, 1916. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 17 Sept. 1917, and was created a C.S.I., 1919. He married, 1 July, 1902, at Sevenoaks, Kate Alice Muriel, only daughter of John Rathbone, of Highcroft, Sevenoaks, and they have three children: Ian Gordon Loch, born 15 April, 1903; Jean Muriel, and Douglas Gordon, born 9 Nov. 1911.

COWIE, HENRY EDWARD COLVIN, Lieut., was born 17 Dec. 1872, son of H. G. Cowie, of the Indian Finance Department, and Tiverton, Devonshire. He was educated at Shrewsbury, and the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich. He was in the Football XI. at Shrewsbury; in the Football XI. at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and in the Royal Engineers Training Battn. Association Team, 1893–94. He entered the Army as a Second Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers 10 Feb. 1893. He was stationed at Chatham from 1893 to 1895, and in India from 1895 to 1900, in the Indian Public Works Department Railway Branch; was promoted Lieutenant 10 Feb. 1896. He served in China, 1900, as Assistant to Field Engineer (Railways); was present at the Relief of Pekin; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1901] (Medal with clasp). He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "Henry Edward Colvin Cowie, Lieut., Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in China." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the G.O.C. Troops in China, and presented by Major-General Creagh. He was employed under the Chinese Government 10 Sept. 1902, to 28 Jan. 1903; was promoted Captain 1 March, 1904; Major 10 Feb. 1913; became Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel 18 May, 1916. He was created a C.B.E. in 1919. He married, in 1903, Mary Theodora, eldest daughter of the Rev. Daniel G. Thomas.

STIRLING, JAMES DAVID, Lieut., was born 17 Dec. 1873, son of the late William Stirling, of Tarduf, Stirlingshire. He entered the Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders, as a Second Lieutenant, 7 March, 1894, and was transferred to the King's Own Scottish Borderers on 18 April of the same year. He saw active service in Chitral with the Relief Force in 1895, and was at the storming of the Malakand Pass (Medal with clasp). He was promoted Lieutenant 21 July, 1897; was transferred again 29 July, 1897, to the Indian Staff Corps. Capt. Stirling served in China in 1900, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1901]; received the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "James David Stirling, Lieut., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in China." He was invested by the King 17 Dec. 1901. He was promoted Captain 7 March, 1903; served in the Bazar Valley Campaign, North-West Frontier of India in 1908 (Medal with clasp). In the spring of 1901 a band of about 1,400 Huang Houtzes (or Chunchuses) broke through the Great Wall and advanced via Yung Ping-fou towards the railway. The Chinese asked for help, and Major Browning and Lieut. Stirling, with 100 Rifles, 4th Punjab Infantry, left Shan-hai-kwan, Headquarters, 3rd Brigade, China Expeditionary Force, at daybreak on the 19th April, for Fooning, to restore confidence and ascertain the whereabouts of the brigands. The party detrained at a small station about 10 miles south of Fooning, where the night was spent. The Chinese informed Major Browning that the brigands had taken possession of the town of Tao-tai-ying, 10 miles further north. Major Browning left at daybreak with 80 men, and on approaching Tao-tai-ying, was fired on from a village. He, with some mounted men on mules, commenced a flanking attack, but they were fired on from another village on their flank, and the party was in danger of being surrounded and their retreat cut off. Major Browning and three sepoys were killed immediately, and Lieut. Stirling, in command of the remainder, was also wounded through the neck and in the foot. Several men were also immediately hit, and, as firing was general from all sides, a retirement was begun. The Huang Houtzes pursued our men for 10 miles. Mounted as they were, they continually got round the small party of infantry. Again and again the Huang Houtzes closed round, and as often the men of the 4th Punjab Infantry kept them off until they reached the gates of Fooning, which were thereupon closed and barricaded. Not till next day was it known that the Huang Houtzes had lost 140 men, if not more, in the fight. Lieut. Stirling was recommended for the D.S.O. in recognition of the skill and judgment which he, though seriously wounded and hampered by casualties, extricated the party from a very difficult position after the death of Major Browning. The fact of his having been wounded did not transpire until the party at Fooning was relieved on the 21st April. Capt. Stirling was killed in action at Hayat Khan Kili, Bannu District, on 11 March, 1910, in what was described at the time as the most daring raid that had taken place on the North-West Frontier of India for many years. The Mullah Powindah of Waziristan despatched a band of 32 Mahsuds for the purpose of raiding the Government Treasury at Lakki, a town of considerable size, about 28 miles within the frontier. The raiders, having marched all night, arrived at dawn at a small hamlet named Hayat Khan Kili, about eight miles from Lakki. Here they were hospitably entertained by the headman of the village, who feigned friendship and installed them in the Weal Mosque. The headman promptly sent information to the police at Lakki, who in turn telegraphed to the military authorities at Bannu. Two squadrons of the 14th Cavalry and 180 men of the 57th Rifles were ordered to start at once. The police arrived from Lakki at about 2 o'clock, but being only about the same strength as those inside the mosque, all they could do was to keep up rifle fire on the mosque and await assistance from Bannu. The cavalry on their arrival at dusk formed a cordon round the mosque, and an advance party of 50 men of the infantry, under Capt. Stirling, reaching the scene of action an hour later, crept up to the surrounding wall and completely shut in the raiders, who took up a position on the roof and shot any man who attempted to get over the wall. Capt. Stirling, who was most zealous in creeping round and looking after his men, was killed while reconnoitring. Although additional troops had now arrived, nothing further could be done without guns, except with severe loss of life, and it was therefore decided to keep the mosque surrounded for the night and await the arrival in the morning of artillery. Firing was kept up on the only exit, but about nine o'clock the Mahsuds, knowing that they were trapped and that their only hope lay in escaping during the night (which was pitch dark), rushed out in a body, firing in all directions, and broke through the cordon. Besides Capt. Stirling, our casualties numbered 6 men and 12 wounded. Of the 32 raiders 15 were accounted for.

MACPHERSON, JAMES, Lieut., was born 20 June, 1876, son of Lieut.-Colonel R. N. Macpherson. He became Second Lieutenant, on the Unattached List, 22 Jan. 1896, and on 30 May, 1897, joined the Indian Staff Corps. He was promoted Lieutenant in the Indian Army 22 April, 1898. Serving in China in 1900, he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 14 May, 1901]; received the Medal, and was awarded the D.S.O. The following is a description taken from a newspaper of how he won his D.S.O.: "Lieut. Macpherson, whose deed of daring in China supplies the historian with the true record of a hair-breadth escape, had a town some eight miles from Peking as the scene of his adventure. Colonel Tulloch, whose detachment was fired upon by invisible assailants all using smokeless powder and modern guns, camped hear Koolying, where the rumour reached him of an intended Boxer attack from Dehhalying. The Colonel asked for reinforcements, and when these arrived in the shape of 50 men, under Lieut. Macpherson, an assault was made on the town. That was the Lieutenant's opportunity. He led a party with scaling ladders; was the first to reach the top of the wall, and to jump down upon the other side. His revolver accounted for five Chinese, and after that he drew his sword and defended himself until his men arrived just in time to save him from certain death." He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "James Macpherson, Lieut., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in China." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to the O.C., India, 12 Feb. 1902, and presented by Major-General Burnett, commanding Poona District, India, 8 April, 1902. He was promoted Captain 22 Jan. 1905; served as Adjutant, Indian Volunteers, 19 Oct. 1908, to 18 Oct. 1913; was promoted Major 22 Jan. 1914. During the European War he was G.S.O.2, India, until 14 Oct. 1915, and A.Q.M.G., India, until 20 Feb. 1916; Acting Lieutenant-Colonel, Indian Army, 8 April to 17 Aug. 1917. He married, in 1907, Constance Margaret, fifth daughter of F. A. Primrose, and they have two sons.

WILLIAMS, HERBERT ARMSTRONG, Lieut., was born 11 Feb. 1875, son of H. M. Williams, J.P., of Williamston, Carvery, County Kildare. He entered the Indian Medical Service as a Lieutenant 27 Jan. 1900, and served in China from 1900 to 1901, for which he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 13 Sept. 1901]; received the Medal and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 10 Dec. 1901]: "Herbert Armstrong Williams, Lieut., Indian Medical Service. In recognition of services during the operations in China." The Insignia, Warrant and Statutes were sent to His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief in India; presented by Colonel R. Oakes, R.G.A. He became Captain 27 Jan. 1903. He was Deputy Sanitary Commissioner in Burma in 1903; Plague Medical Officer, 1906; Superintendent, Rangoon Lunatic Asylum, 1907. Since 1907 he has been Superintendent of the Rangoon General Hospital. He was promoted Major 27 July, 1911, and was Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel from 17 Nov. 1917, to 5 March, 1919.

London Gazette, 28 Jan. 1902.—"The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order . . . in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the operations in South Africa. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

ROYSTON, JOHN ROBINSON, Lieut.-Colonel, was born 29 April, 1860, son of William Royston, of Bellair, Natal. He first saw active service in the Zulu Campaign of 1878–79 (Medal with clasp). He also served in the South African War of 1899 to 1902, and was present in operations in Natal in 1899, including the actions at Reitfontein and Lombard's Kop; the Defence of Ladysmith, including sortie of 7 Dec. 1899, and action of 6 Jan. 1900. Sir A. Conan Doyle thus describes the sortie from Ladysmith in "The Great Boer War," page 169: "December 7 was marked by a gallant exploit on the part of the beleaguered garrison. Not a whisper had transpired of the coming sortie, and a quarter of an hour before the start officers engaged had no idea of it. O si sic omnia! At ten o'clock a band of men slipped out of the town. There were six hundred of them, all irregulars, drawn from the Imperial Light Horse, the Natal Carabineers, and the Border Mounted Rifles, under the command of Hunter, youngest and most dashing of British generals. Edwardes and Royston were the sub-commanders. The men had no knowledge of where they were going or what they had to do, but they crept silently along under a drifting sky, with peeps of a quarter moon, over a mimosa-shadowed plain. At last in front of them there loomed a dark mass—it was Gun Hill, from which one of the great Creusots had plagued them. A strong support (four hundred men) was left at the base of the hill, and the others, one hundred Imperials, one hundred Borders and Carabineers, ten Sappers, crept upwards with Major Henderson as guide. A Dutch outpost challenged, but was satisfied by a Dutch-speaking Carabineer. Higher and higher the men crept, the silence broken only by the occasional slip of a stone or the rustle of their own breathing. Most of them had left their boots below. Even in the darkness they kept some formation, and the right wing curved forward to outflank the defence. Suddenly a Mauser crack and a spurt of flame—then another and another! 'Come on, boys! Fix bayonets!' yelled Karri Davies. There were no bayonets, but that was a detail. At the word the gunners were off, and there in the darkness in front of the storming party loomed the enormous gun, gigantic in that uncertain light. Out with the huge breech-block! Wrap the long, lean muzzle round with a collar of gun-cotton! Keep the guard upon the run until the work is done! Hunter stood by with a night-light in his hand until the charge was in position, and then, with a crash which brought both armies from their tents, the huge tube reared up on its mountings and toppled backwards into the pit. A howitzer lurked beside it, and this also was blown into ruin. The attendant Maxim was dragged back by the exultant captors, who reached the town amid shoutings and laughter with the first break of day. One man wounded, the gallant Henderson, is the cheap price for the best-planned and most dashing exploit of the war. Secrecy in conception, vigour in execution—they are the root ideas of the soldier's craft. So easily was the enterprise carried out, and so defective the Boer watch, that it is probable that if all the guns had been simultaneously attacked the Boers might have found themselves without a single piece of ordnance in the morning." He also took part in operations in Natal, March to June, 1900, including action at Laing's Nek; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to Oct. 1900, in command of the West Australian Mounted Infantry; operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902; operations on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Sept. and Oct. 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 17 and 25 April, 1902, and 4 Dec. 1903]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps; was created a C.M.G., and was also created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 28 Jan. 1902]: "J. R. Royston, Lieut.-Colonel, West Australian Mounted Infantry. For ability and dash in the capture of laagers on 14 Dec. 1901, and 4 Jan. 1902, in Ermelo District." All his German decorations were returned in 1914, as a protest against German barbarities to women and wounded. He was a C.V.O. in 1906; became Colonel 2 Sept. 1908, and retired on 22 March, 1910, to work for Boy Scouts and National Service, in order to meet the German menace. Colonel Trench wrote a book called "Manœuvre Orders." He married, in 1900, Anne Somerville, daughter of John N. Craddock, of Tuscaloosa, U.S.A.

TURTON, WILLIAM HARRY, Major, was born 30 Dec. 1856, at Peshawar, India, son of Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet Colonel Joseph Turton, Bengal Artillery, and grandson of Zouch Turton, of Chepstow and Monmouth.

William Harry Turton.

He was educated at Clifton College (Schools' Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society), and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich (Pollock Medallist); and was gazetted to the Royal Engineers, as Lieutenant, 14 Aug. 1876. He became Captain 14 Aug. 1887, and Major 2 May, 1895. He served in the South African War, May, 1900, to May, 1902, chiefly in the Kimberley and Mafeking Districts, but arrived too late for the sieges. He was Commanding Royal Engineer, Western District, Transvaal, from 4 Oct. 1901 till the end of the war, and was engaged in constructing blockhouse lines along the railway, from Kimberley north as far as Gaberones, and a few across country. The greatest number of blockhouses erected in any one month was 375 (28 March to 28 April, 1902), perhaps a record. He was present in operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, and in Orange River Colony, July to 29 Nov. 1900; operations in Cape Colony, north of Orange River, June to July, 1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to March, 1901, and Oct. 1901, to 31 May, 1902; operations in Orange River Colony 30 Nov. 1900, to March, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, March to Oct. 1901. He was mentioned in Despatches 8 July, 1902 [London Gazette, 17 June, 1902], received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1902]: "William Harry Turton, Major, Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Lieut.-Colonel Turton says: "I was never officially informed as to why I was awarded the D.S.O. I do not think it was customary to do so in that war. But I have no doubt in my own mind that it was in consequence of my defence of Christiana, Transvaal, where I was in command from July, 1900, to March, 1901. At the request of the Editor, I wrote a short account of this for the 'Royal Engineers' Journal,' July 1901, but of course it had to be censored, and some of the most interesting parts were omitted." He became Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Oct. 1902, and retired from the Service 4 Oct. 1905. Lieut.-Colonel Turton is the author of a book called "The Truth of Christianity," now in its 40th thousand, which has been translated into Japanese, Italian, Chinese and Arabic. He is also the author of several hymns, one of which on the "Sacrament of Unity" has been included in the "Ancient and Modern," and at least a dozen other collections. He takes an interest in genealogy and conchology, and hopes to publish shortly a book on early European Genealogies, and possibly one on the Shells of Port Alfred, South Africa, where he has collected shells for many years.

THOMPSON, HARRY NEVILLE, Major, was born 15 March, 1861, son of the late Rev. Mungo Neville Thompson, Rector of Clonmany, Donegal, and Charlotte Blake, of Castlegrove, Co. Galway. There is a delightful book about the British Salonica Army, written by Mr. H. Collinson Owen. Its preface is written by General Sir George Milne, who says of the book: "It will help to lift the veil of mystery which hung over the doings of the Army, due to the lack of publicity given to those events in Macedonia which ultimately led to the defeat in the field of the Bulgarian Army, worn out by three years of constant and harassing warfare. The chapters dealing with the attacks on the Doiran position summarize the great difficulties which had to be surmounted by men whose strength was being slowly sapped by prolonged residence in the most unhealthy portion of Europe, but whose esprit de corps was of the highest and whose faith in ultimate victory never faltered. This book may help some to see in proper perspective how the crowning achievement of long and weary vigil in a secondary theatre of operations struck at the Achilles heel of the Central Powers, and materially aided in their rapid collapse during the dramatic autumn of 1918." In the book itself Mr. Owen wrote, on pages 76 and 77: "There was one often to be met with up-country whom one cannot presume to include amongst one's friends, but who meant a great deal to the life of everyone in the B.S.F. Often on a lonely hill road one would see far ahead a car coming with something that fluttered on it. The driver would see it too, and unconsciously stiffen a little. Somebody on the roadside would see it, and stand very erect and ready. And then the car would flash past, with the Union Jack fluttering out. The British Commander-in-Chief was on his way up or down the line; the man who held in his hand the thunders of Jove, or the kindly power to reward good work well done. It always gave a little thrill to meet the C.-in-C. on the road. One felt suddenly very much in touch with home, and England's power and all that she stands for. Here, in a sense, was the King himself; or as near to him as we in Macedonia could hope to get. Many stories are told of encounters with the C.-in-C. on the road. Some are true, no doubt, and some only ben trovato. There are stories of swift and terrible lightnings; other stories very kindly and gentle in demeanour, eminently satisfactory to all concerned. Stories of quite humble people being picked up and given a lift, and being able to air their views before Authority in a fashion they would never have dreamed of; and other stories of people who fled wildly from the possibility of encounter. No doubt all Armies have similar stories about their Commanders-in-Chief. These things grow and expand, and take varying colours from the messes they pass through. And, as everybody knows, every good General has a nickname by which his troops know him. Unhappy the General who is only known by his proper rank and titles. Napoleon had his nickname. And our General was called 'Uncle George.' Perhaps he knew it, and perhaps he didn't, but there can be no doubt that it was a very good nickname to have." Mr. Owen tells us on page 153 how "After the victorious offensive in 1918, the Bishop of London, who was out visiting the Balkan Army, wrote a letter to the 'Times,' which, in the history of Salonica, may well rank with St. Paul's epistles to the Thessalonians. In it he asked eloquently for fairness to a gallant force, and in commenting on the letter, the 'Times' put its finger right on the spot. 'Few of us at home,' it said, 'have any conception how much our praise, and, when necessary, our criticism, if only it is sympathetic, means for the Armies at the front—how much it sustains them in their trials and spurs them to fresh efforts to victory. . . . These men in our Eastern Armies have had the dust and toil, without the laurel, of the race to Victory.' As a matter of fact, the British troops in the Balkans were particularly good men. The four Divisions mainly concerned in the campaign were all of splendid quality. One might even call it a picked army. Average troops could certainly not have stuck the long campaign, and rallied so magnificently for the final desperate enterprise, as General Milne describes in his 1919 Despatch. But such was the fatality which pursued our Salonica Army that even when the great break-through occurred their names hardly figured in the general communiqué, which was issued from the French Command, and the people at home knew that there had been a great Balkan victory without knowing that our men had played a vital part in winning it. And while we are on this subject, it will be as well to give part of an interview which a French correspondent, M. Gaston Richard, had with one of the leading French commanders in the Balkans, and which was published in the 'Petit Parisien.' I took it from a Constantinople paper which had copied it. 'The Allied Armies were marvellously keyed up, and their high moral certainly dominated that of the Bulgars. No army endeavoured to act alone, and this harmony of forces counted for a great deal in the decision. Let us take, for example, the work of the Anglo-Greek Army, which operated on a front where the enemy was constantly expecting to be attacked, and where he had, in consequence, multiplied his defences, brought up great reserves, and placed in position an enormous quantity of artillery. Behind this thick curtain of defences, and in view of an offensive on their own part, the enemy had gathered formidable reserves of material. The mission of the Anglo-Greek Army was to pin the enemy to the ground and to oblige him to employ his reserves, in order to prevent him sending them to points menaced elsewhere. This rôle it filled marvellously, and if you had been able to be present at all that it accomplished, you would have been enthusiastic. And when later the Bulgars evacuated the Doiran Front, in order to fly towards Strumitza, the Anglo-Greek Army, in pressing the pursuit with energy, prevented any re-grouping of divisions and contributed to change the enemy retreat into an irremediable rout. This must be said for the honour of truth.' We ask for no more definite tribute to the part of the B.S.F. in the great victory which was the real and authentic beginning of the end. 'We knocked the props one by one from under him,' said Mr. Lloyd George. Doiran was the first prop." It is difficult to quote from General Milne's Despatches, because they are so interesting one does not know which part to choose. These are the concluding words of the Despatch of 22 Jan. 1919: "I am glad to be in a position to report that our relations with our numerous Allies have been of a most cordial and intimate character, and that during the two-and-a-half years of my command I have received no complaint of serious injury to person or property against any one in the army, the discipline of which is of the highest. I desire to place on record the consideration I have always received from the Allied Commanders-in-Chief, General Guillaumat and General Franchet d'Esperey, and the complete harmony which has existed between the Allied Staffs. I cannot close this report without expressing my high appreciation of the splendid spirit and devotion to the service of their country shown by all ranks of this Army, the majority of whom will return to their homes with constitutions shattered by a prolonged stay in this malarious and inhospitable country."

Mr. Owen's book not only describes people, but places, so that we who have never been there might almost find our way about Salonica and recognize the people he describes: "During the long period when he reigned supreme, General Sarrail, Commander-in-Chief of the Allied Armies, was often to be seen about. Tall, handsome, white-haired and energetic, General Sarrail graced most functions with his presence. He loved to see and to be seen, and had the gift for mixing with men of all kinds. . . . But there was one whose presence also meant a great deal in Salonica, who was practically unknown to the Salonica public. I refer to General Sir George Milne, the British Army Commander. The two Generals were extraordinarily contrasted, and one avoided publicity as much as the other appreciated it. General Milne spent a very large part of his time up-country. During three years his journeys by motor-car averaged 75 miles a day, excluding great distances from point to point on horseback. One may say of our General that he was largely typical of his Army. Out of the limelight, saying little, doing much—this may stand fairly as the motto of the British Salonica Forces."

In "Salonica and After" one reads descriptions of the country and its drawbacks and its history—and its beauty, and he quotes from Capt. Owen Rutter's "Song of Tiadatha," which he calls "that little classic of the B.S.F.":

"Very lovely is Kyoto
In the days of cherry blossom;
Very lovely is the splendour
Of the snow-capped Rocky Mountains;
Lovely are the coral islands
Strung like jade in the Pacific;
And the palm trees of Malaya
Black against an orange sunset.
Lovely are the long white breakers
On the beach at Honolulu,
Even as the Thames Embankment
On a misty day in Autumn.
Gib. at dawn, Hong-Kong at evening,
Lights of Rio in the darkness,
And the golden gate of 'Frisco,
All of these are very lovely;
Yet I know a sight still fairer:
Doiran red and grey and yellow,
Clustered on the Serbian hillside,
Gleaming in the morning sunlight;
Ever gazing, like Narcissus,
Down upon its own reflection
In the lake that laps its houses."

But best of all is the story of the deathless glory won by men and battalions. Who can read unstirred the pages about the 12th Cheshires, when they climbed Jackson's Ravine, as it is told in the chapter on "Victory"?: "Our men just melted away and lay on the parched brown grass of the slope up which they were labouring. Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. A. R. Clegg-Hill, D.S.O., fell, mortally wounded. In a few minutes the battalion had practically ceased to exist." Following hard on their heels came the 9th South Lancashires, and of them the historian of the B.S.F. writes: "Lieut.-Colonel B. F. Bishop, M.C., was killed there, and the battalion, as an official report said bluntly, was 'more or less annihilated.'" The story goes on: "The 8th K.S.L.I.'s pressed on behind the South Lancashires, and suffered very heavy casualties." On the right of the western half of the attack, the Welshmen of the 67th Brigade (Brigadier-General A. D. Macpherson) fought their way magnificently up the string of heights leading up to their main objective, Grand Couronné. Mr. Owen describes "the stern and bitter fighting" of the 11th Welsh Fusiliers, under Lieut.-Colonel A. H. Yatman. Following the Fusiliers, the 11th Welsh (Lieut.-Colonel L. H. Trist, M.C.) attacked from Shropshire Ravine. And then is the tale of the doings of the 7th South Wales Borderers, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Dan Burges, D.S.O., who there won his Victoria Cross: "The last to leave those tragic slopes were the sole survivors of the South Wales Borderers—eighteen unwounded men and one wounded officer. Out of all the gallantry and horror and raging inferno of that early morning this was their reward—to come back, leaving all their comrades lying on the hot, bare rocks and in the sparse scrub above. True, the battalion only started a few hundreds strong. But is there anything in our history to surpass it? Balaklava grows dim beside it. But it is unlikely that any Laureate will sing the story of Grand Couronné."

SECCOMBE, ARCHIBALD KENNEDY, Major, was born 22 March, 1868. Perkins, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. In recognition of services during operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 18 Feb. 1903.

The following is an extract from Divisional Orders by Major-General R. Lloyd-Payne, C.B., D.S.O., Commanding 5th (Mhow) Division, dated Mhow, the 1st March, 1916:

"ADMINISTRATION.

"130. Special. The General Officer commanding the Division regrets to announce the death of Lieut.-Colonel J. C. C. Perkins, D.S.O., Military Deputy Auditor-General, Southern Army. Lieut.-Colonel Perkins, in the course of his tour in the Division, came to Mhow with full military honours. Entering the Service on the 16th Nov. 1887, Lieut.-Colonel Perkins joined the Leinster Regt., and was transferred to the Indian Army on the 8th Jan. 1890. On the 15th Feb. 1894, he joined the Military Accounts Department, in which he served through the South African War, for his services in which he was mentioned in Despatches and received the D.S.O. On the reorganization of the Military Accounts Department, he was appointed Military Deputy Auditor-General, Southern Army, on 1 April, 1914, in which appointment he was serving at the time of his death. From the very beginning of the war, Colonel Perkins was called upon to undertake a mass of extra work of a very trying nature, and did not spare himself in the performance of his duty. The General Officer Commanding is assured that all will join with him in regretting the decease of this distinguished officer, whose decease was largely attributable, if not entirely due, to his unremitting labours in connection with the war."

Colonel Perkins was fond of cricket, football and racquets, and sport of all kinds. He married (1st) Emma Victoria Augusta, daughter of General Douglas Seafield Grant, I.S.C. (who died in 1912), and (2ndly), in 1913, Charlotte Mary, daughter of Harold Beauchamp.

JOHNSON, RAYMOND BAZLEY, Capt., was born 30 Jan. 1877, son of the late Capt. William Johnson, formerly 6th Dragoons, and Mrs. Johnson, of Oddington, Moreton-in-Marsh; and grandson of the late Sir William Arnott, 1st Bart. He was gazetted to the 1st Dragoons 4 May, 1898, and became Lieutenant 5 July, 1899, and subsequently Captain, 6th Inniskilling Dragoons. Lieut. R. B. Johnson embarked for South Africa, with B Squadron, 6th Inniskilling Dragoons, in S.S. Jamaican, at Queenstown, on 23 Oct. 1899. You come across him from time to time in "With the Inniskilling Dragoons" (Lieut.-Colonel J. Watkins Yardley, C.M.G., D.S.O.). On 9 Feb. 1900: "At dawn the Boers shelled Slingersfontein Camp for the first time, putting twenty-seven shells into it before our artillery silenced their guns.. Simultaneously the enemy in force attacked the windmill posts of Hobkirk's Farm and Bastard's Nek, occupied by the Victorian Mounted Rifles, driving them in, with the loss of one killed and three wounded. Lieut. Raymond Johnson, with his troop of Inniskilling Dragoons, who were inlying picket, and therefore ready saddled, at once galloped off to seize Hobkirk's Ridge before the enemy could reach it; he was just in time, but was attacked from right front and left rear, being almost surrounded. He dismounted the men, who fought splendidly. One Corporal was killed; another corporal was shot through the sleeve at close range by a young Boer of about fourteen years, whom he had to shoot in self-defence. Another man from one side of a bush poked a Boer in the stomach with the barrel of his unloaded carbine, loaded quickly, and shot the Boer. Five men were cut off, but hid in a kloof and rejoined later. Gallantly the little troop held on to the ridge until Major Dauncey, reinforced by the remainder of the Inniskillings and the South Australians, drove back the enemy, who remained all day sniping from Hobkirk's Farm." On Page 84 of Colonel Yardley's book, we are told how, from Dreifontein: "Lieut. Raymond Johnson, Inniskilling Dragoons, with six men, cleverly found his way, during the night, with General French's Despatches to Lord Roberts at Germiston. He had to elude several parties of the enemy, but returned safely, after a night full of adventures, his mission safely accomplished. He was accompanied by Mr. Paterson, the Australian poet and correspondent." On 30 Aug.: "President Kruger was reported to have been at Waterval Onder the previous day, and General French was anxious to obtain news. So B Squadron of the Inniskillings, under Major Dauncey, was ordered to descend to the town and bring away the prisoners we had taken, among whom was a wounded soldier of our own. The enemy, hidden in the rocky kloofs and bush beyond the town, completely commanded the drift and approaches, and also the town itself. The squadron gained the town, galloping over the exposed ground through a hail of bullets. Lieut. Lawlor, at the head of his troop, was mortally wounded, shot through the body. He was a fine officer and a great loss to the regiment, and died cheery and brave to the last. Major Dauncey himself, charging in advance of his squadron, with Lieuts. Lawlor and Johnson, was grazed by two bullets, but the town was reached. In it none could show without being shot, so cover was taken in the buildings and the prisoners were not brought away till darkness ensured a safe return." On 6 May, 1901, Colonel Yardley writes: "Lieut. Raymond Johnson and Second Lieuts. Dixon and Holland joined at Brakfontein with a draft, but Lieut. Raymond Johnson left next day to go upon Colonel Rimington's Staff as galloper to his column, which was forming at Standerton." On 23 Sept., when Colonel Rimington surprised the Boers between the Klip and Bilge Rivers, "Lieut. R. B. Johnson, Inniskillings (Provost-Marshal), with his police, came across a small laager of seventeen Boers, who were taken with all their wagons; two were killed and one wounded. It was a smart performance. For their gallant and dashing conduct Lieut. R. B. Johnson and Lieut. F. W. Moffitt, who was serving under him, were mentioned by Lord Kitchener in Despatches (8 Oct. 1901). On 1 June (1902) a telegram was received from the Commander-in-Chief that peace had been signed on the previous night, 31 May. This news was received by all our troops very quietly. On the breaking-up of the force, 20 June, the Inniskillings marched to Bloemfontein. A small contingent, under Capt. Raymond Johnson, proceeded to England early in June to represent the regiment at His Majesty's Coronation."

The record of Capt. Johnson's services in the South African War, as given in "Hart's Army List," is as follows: He served, 1899–1902; took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, March to May, 1900, including actions at Vet River and Zand River; in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900, including actions near Johannesburg, Pretoria, and Diamond Hill (11 and 12 June); in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including actions at Reit Vlei and Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, including actions at Colesberg (1 Jan. to 12 Feb.); served as Adjutant, 6th Dragoons, 1 April to 31 May, 1902; again during operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony, 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. For his services in the South African War, Capt. Johnson was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. and 3 Dec. 1901]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1902]: "Raymond Bazley Johnson, Capt., 6th Dragoons. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by the King 24 Oct. 1902. Capt. Johnson retired from the Inniskilling Dragoons. He served in the European War, as Lieutenant-Commander, Royal Naval Armoured Cars, 1914–15; in the Cavalry Reserve, and as Commandant, School of Instruction, 1916–17; in the Royal Air Force, 1918. He married, in 1912, Lilian, youngest daughter of the late Herman Eckstein (of Johannesburg), and Mrs. R. P. Cobbold, of Welford Park, Newbury, Berkshire, and they have one son and two daughters.

GIBB, EVAN, Capt., was born 12 March, 1877, eldest son of the late William Gibb, of Craigton, Fintry. Baron von Steinaecker, Colonel, German Guards, and the Baroness von Steinaecker, (née Baroness von Thumen). He was educated in the Royal Cadet Corps at Waklstatt and Berlin, and entered the German Army (Leib Grenadiers) in the early seventies. He resigned his commission in 1879, and went to Bulgaria with Prince Alexander of Battenberg. During the Bulgarian Revolution of 1880 he had a command at Plevna, and he resigned about 1885. He led the expedition into the interior of German South-West Africa; returned in 1888, and came out to Pondoland in 1889. He settled in Natal in 1890; was President of the Political Association of this district; joined the British Forces (Colonial Scouts) on the outbreak of the South African War, 1899–1902, on 1 Nov. 1899, as a Trooper. He left Maritzburg at the beginning of March, 1900, to break, with a small patrol, the enemy's communication on the Delagoa Line; rode through Natal, Zululand, Tongaland and Swaziland; lost all his horses; smashed Malalene Bridge on the Delagoa Line on the 17th June, 1900, and took the Commandant of that line—Van Dam—prisoner. He recruited some British refugees from Portuguese territory, and, by activity of movement, drew considerable numbers of the enemy from the real theatre of war (Dalmanutha). In order to protect the railway between Campmunden and the border, he raised Steinaecker's Horse, in the enemy's country, without base to draw from, without transport or provisions. He landed stores and men at Koxi Bay from H.M. Gunboat (Capt. Gurney); was given command by Lord Kitchener of the Border and adjacent lowland country (Swaziland north to Letruba River). He received the Queen's Medal with four Bars, and the King's Medal with two; was mentioned in Despatches, and given the British decoration of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1902]: "Francis Christian Ludwig Steinaecker, Major, Steinaecker's Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented publicly by General Lyttelton. Baron von Steinaecker was sent to Netley in April, 1902. He attended the Coronation of King Edward at the head of a contingent of his own regiment (Steinaecker's Horse) by direct orders from Lord Roberts, but could never get the Coronation Medal (in spite of official document in hand). He was pronounced medically unfit for further service by Medical Board, London, in July, 1902; "received honorary rank of Lieutenant-Colonel," he remarks, "probably in lieu of pension. Now destitute after . . . years of the most ghastly climate South Africa can produce." Baron von Steinaecker married, in 1881, the daughter of Geheimer Ober-Regierungs Rath Kegler, of Berlin.

Sir A Conan Doyle tells us in "The Great Boer War," in the chapter on "The Advance to Komatipoort," how "Colonel Steinaecker, an ex-officer of the German Imperial Army, with an irregular force of 600 men, had been operating upon the Boer line of communications in the same way as De Wet had on the British, though their operations were necessarily on a smaller scale. The whole romantic adventures of this small force, which passed through Zululand and Tongaland, and eventually made its way into Swaziland, after several times cutting the Boer railway and blowing up Malalene Bridge, are among the most curious and interesting incidents of the campaign. They captured the Boer officer in charge of the line of communication, and they gave work from first to last to a couple of thousand of the enemy, who had to guard the line from their constant descents. Some separate book will no doubt give a full account of the adventures of Steinaecker's Horse." Elsewhere, in describing how a small body of the South African Constabulary were outnumbered by the Boers, Sir A. Conan Doyle says: "Another small reverse occurred at a far distant point of the seat of war, for the irregular corps known as Steinaecker's Horse was driven from its position at Bremersdorp in Swaziland upon 24 July, and had to fall back sixteen miles, with a loss of ten casualties and thirty prisoners." Sir A. Conan Doyle also says: "After the conclusion of Blood's movement in July, several of his columns continued to clear the country, and to harass Viljeon in the Lydenburg and Dulstroom districts. Park, Kitchener, Spens, Beatson and Benson were all busy at this work, never succeeding in forcing more than a skirmish, but continually whittling away wagons, horses and men from that nucleus of resistance which the Boer leaders still held together. Though much hampered by the want of forage for their horses, the Boers were ever watchful for an opportunity to strike back, and the long list of minor successes gained by the British was occasionally interrupted by a petty reverse. Such a one befell the small body of South African Constabulary stationed near Vereeniging, who encountered, upon July 13, a strong force of Boers supposed to be the main commando of De Wet. The Constabulary behaved with great gallantry, but were hopelessly outnumbered, and lost their seven-pounder gun, four killed, six wounded and twenty-four prisoners . . . Thus in the heart of a native state the two great white races of South Africa were to be seen locked in a desperate conflict. However unavoidable, the sight was certainly one to be deplored."

DALLIMORE, P. JOSEPH, Capt., was born 24 March, 1871, son of Peter Dallimore. He served in the South African War of 1899–1902; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1902]: "Joseph Dallimore, Capt., 5th Victorian Mounted Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia, Warrant, etc., were sent to the Colonial Office 10 Dec. 1902. He married, in 1899, Beatrice Mary, daughter of G. A. Wiggs.

PERCIVAL, HAROLD FRANZ PASSAWER, Lieut., was born in London 12 Feb. 1876, son of E. P. Percival, LL.D., and of Mrs. Percival. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, and became Second Lieutenant, in the Derbyshire Regt., 4 May, 1898, and Lieutenant 25 Feb. 1900. On 5 May, 1901, he was transferred as Second Lieutenant to the Army Service Corps, in which he became Lieutenant 1 May, 1901. Lieut. Percival took part in the South African War, with the Mounted Infantry, 1899 to 1902, and was present at operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900; operations in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, including the action at Belfast (26 and 27 Aug.); operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899 to 1900; operations in the Transvaal 30 Nov. 1900, to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 17 June, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with three clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1902]: "Harold Franz Passawer Percival, Lieut., Army Service Corps. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The Insignia were presented by the King 18 Dec. 1902. He became Captain, Army Service Corps, 18 Feb. 1904; was Staff Captain at the War Office 1 Jan. 1910, to 30 Sept. 1912, and D.A.Q.M.G., Staff College, 1 Oct. 1912, to 4 Aug. 1914. He became Major 7 Oct. 1914. He served in the European War, as D.A.Q.M.G., G.H.Q., British Expeditionary Force, 5 Aug. 1914, to 5 April, 1915; was Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel from 6 April, 1915, to 11 Dec. 1917, while holding the appointment of Assistant Director of Supplies at the War Office; Deputy Director of Supplies, War Office, 12 Dec. 1917, to 8 April, 1919. He was given his Brevet Lieutenant-Colonelcy 3 June, 1918. Lieut.-Colonel Percival was appointed 9 April, 1919, A.Q.M.G. in a Special Mission in connection with Russian prisoners of war in Germany. He was mentioned twice in Despatches; created a C.M.G. in 1917; has the 1914 Star, and was created an Officer of the Legion of Honour. He married, in 1904, Constance Lilian, daughter of J. Meyrick, and they have two daughters.

London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1902.—"War Office, 2 Sept. 1902. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of the services of the undermentioned Officers during the Mahsud-Waziri operations and the capture of Nodiz Fort in Mekran, respectively."

SWANSTON, CHARLES OLIVER, Capt., was born at Cuddalore, Southern India, 8 April, 1865, elder son of the late Major-General William Oliver Swanston, Madras Staff Corps, who served as a Trooper in Havelock's Volunteer Cavalry in the Indian Mutiny. His grandfather was the late Capt. Charles ("Corygorm") Swanston, who raised one thousand men for the Poona Auxiliary Horse; and he was great-grandnephew of Horatio Lord Nelson, his mother being a granddaughter of Mrs. Kitty Matcham. He was educated privately and at the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the Royal Irish Fusiliers, May, 1885. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1887, and transferred to the 18th Bengal Lancers, Indian Army, in 1888. In 1896 and 1897 he was A.D.C. to Sir George White, Commander-in-Chief in India; was D.A.Q.M.G., Headquarters Staff of Tirah Expedition, 1897–98 (Despatches [London Gazette, 5 April, 1898]; Medal with two clasps). He was D.A.Q.M.G., Khyber Field Force, 1898–99; D.A.Q.M.G., Punjab Frontier Force, 1900–3; D.A.Q.M.G., Mahsud-Waziri operations, 1901–2. For his services in Waziristan he was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 8 Aug. 1902], and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1902]: "Charles Oliver Swanston, Capt., Indian Staff Corps. For services during the Mahsud-Waziri operations." In 1902 he took part in the operations against the Darwesh Khel Waziris, acting as Staff Officer to the General Officer Commanding, and was again mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 5 June, 1903]. He was on Headquarters Staff as D.A.Q.M.G. in the Somaliland Campaign of 1903–4, for which he received the Medal with two clasps, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1904]. In 1905 Capt. Swanston passed the final examination of the Staff College, and in 1906 was promoted Major. In 1910 he was placed on the list of officers considered qualified for Staff employment for services in the field. In 1910 he became G.S.O., 2nd Grade, and in May, 1911, he reached the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel, being appointed Second-in-Command of the 34th Prince Albert Victor's Own Poona Horse from the Bengal Lancers in 1910, and, while serving on the General Staff, succeeded to the command of his regiment in the same year. Lieut.-Colonel Swanston was killed on the 2nd Nov. 1914, near Neuve Chapelle, while at the head of his regiment, which had been ordered up to the support of some of our trenches. He was a fine horseman, and won many flat races in India. Lieut.-Colonel Swanston married, 18 Jan. 1898, Miss Kathleen Bruce Johnston, daughter of the late R. Bruce Johnston, Esq., Writer to the Signet, of Edinburgh. His wife, however, predeceased him, and he left no family. His sister, Miss C. Olivia Swanston, writes: "I do not know if it is generally known that my brother's name was mentioned to serve on the Defence Committee by Lord Roberts in or about 1905 or 1906, but though he was not elected, as being younger and with less service qualifications than the officer who was chosen, it was a great source of gratification to my brother at the time."

Charles Oliver Swanston.

GRAHAME, JOHN CRUM, Capt., was born at Auldhouse, Renfrewshire, 2 Feb. 1870, son of James Grahame and Agnes Crum, daughter of John Crum, of Thornliebank; and great-grandson of Archibald Grahame, of Drumquhassle, Drymen, Stirlingshire. He was educated at Cargilfield, and Harrow; joined the 2nd Battn. Highland Light Infantry (from the Militia) 9 April, 1892; became Lieutenant 22 Nov. 1894. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98, with the 2nd Battn. Highland Light Infantry, with Malakand and Buner Field Forces; in operations in Bajour and in the Mamund country; assault and capture of the Tanga Pass (India Medal and clasp "Punjab Frontier, 1897–98"). He took part in the operations in Ashanti, 1900—under Sir James Willcocks—attached to 1st Battn. West African Frontier Force, as Subaltern, and finally Captain (1 Aug. 1900), of F (Haussa) Company; was present at assault and capture of Kokofu; actions near Kumassi and Danassi, and the final defeat of the Ashantis near Obassi. He was mentioned in Despatches: "This officer did very good work" (Ashanti Medal, 1900, with clasp "Kumassi"). In the operations in Southern Nigeria, 1901–2, he was with the 3rd Battn. West African Frontier Force, as Captain, F (Yoruba) Company, and was appointed Local Major and to command a District. He was mentioned in Despatches by the Officer Commanding the Field Force: "After the capture of Aro Chuko, this officer was selected to disarm and subjugate a large extent of territory. So well was this duty carried out that I was enabled to bring hostilities to a close at least a month sooner than I anticipated, and before the rains set in." He took part in various engagements, was slightly wounded; received the African General Service Medal with clasp "Aro, 1901–2," and was appointed a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 12 Sept. 1902]: "John Crum Grahame, Capt., Highland Light Infantry. For services during the Aro Expedition in Southern Nigeria." He served with the Egyptian Army, 1903–7; attached Sudan Civil Administration, 1904–7; was promoted Major 18 Dec. 1908; commanded Detachment, 2nd Highland Light Infantry, which was on duty at the Coronation of H.M. King George V. (Coronation Medal). He commanded the Depôt of the Highland Light Infantry, 1911–12. In Aug. 1914, he was appointed to command the 10th (Service) Battn. Highland Light Infantry, which he raised, organized and trained. In May, 1915, he took this battalion to France, and served in the trenches near Festubert and Cambrai. He commanded the battalion at the Battle of Loos (severely gassed in action); was mentioned in Despatches (January, 1916), for "gallant and distinguished conduct in the field." He commanded the 10th Highland Light Infantry till 9 March, 1916, when he was invalided home; rejoined Expeditionary Force for the fourth time in Dec. 1916, and was in command in the trenches of the 10/11th Highland Light Infantry, and subsequently of the 12th Battn., and of the 9th Battn. (Glasgow Highlanders). On promotion to Substantive Lieutenant-Colonel (16 Dec. 1916), he took over command in the field of his old battalion, the 2nd Highland Light Infantry, with which he was serving when very severely wounded near Oppy during the Battle of Arras, April, 1917. Lieut.-Colonel Grahame had thus the honour of commanding in the Field Regular, Service and Territorial Units of the Highland Light Infantry. He has done a good deal of big game shooting on the Blue Nile, and has travelled considerably in Europe—Bosnia, Herzegovina, Croatia, Hungary and Galicia, and also in the Himalayas.

He was D.A.A.G., Egypt, 10 Feb. 1906, to 8 March, 1910; became Major 7 April, 1910; was G.S.O.2, Staff College, 23 April, 1910, to 14 Aug. 1913; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 18 Jan. 1911; was Inspector-General, King's African Rifles, 15 Aug. 1913, to 18 Sept. 1914. He served in the Great War; as G.S.O.1, 7th Division, B.E.F., 12 Nov. 1914, to 24 March, 1915; commanded the 8th Infantry Brigade, B.E.F., 25 March, 1915, to Feb. 1916; was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 10 April, 1916; commanded the 1st East African Division, East African Force, 1 April, 1916, to 27 July, 1917; became Major-General 1 Jan. 1917.

There is a book, "With the Nigerians in German East Africa," written by Capt. W. D. Downes, and published by Messrs. Methuen, of which it has been said: "This deeply interesting book begins with an account of the German East Africa Campaign before the arrival of the Nigerian Brigade. It then describes the doings of that Brigade. The operations and battles are narrated with great vividness, and the story ends with the passing of Von Lettow into Portuguese territory, at which moment Germany lost her last colony." General Hoskins, as Commander-in-Chief in East Africa in 1917, is, of course, mentioned from time to time in Major Downes's book, although it is mainly concerned with the doings of the Nigeria Regiment of the West African Frontier Force, which formed part of the Force which was in 1917 commanded by Sir Arthur Hoskins. Major Downes begins his book by saying that in British West African Colonies, "there are certain races and tribes that take to fighting as a duck takes to water. These are trained and led by officers and non-commissioned officers specially selected for service in the tropics, who are seconded for a certain period from their British regiments to the various battalions of the W.A.F.F. . . . . It is my hope that when the reader has finished this book, he will be as convinced as the writer that these soldiers from the borders of the sun-scorched Sahara, from the banks of the Niger and the Benue, from Yorubaland and Calabar, are second to none among the dark-skinned sons of the Empire as fighting men." Major Downes traces the history of the W.A.F.F. from June, 1863, when the first Hausas were trained as soldiers, thirty Hausa Police of the Lagos being armed and drilled that year. "This force went by the nickname of 'The Forty Thieves,' but why I do not know; nor have I any records of there being more than thirty all told." Commander, usually known as Captain, John Glover, R.N., Lieutenant-Governor of Lagos, wrote of this body of men: "They are very apt in their drill and are proud of being soldiers, and have shown on two recent occasions at Epe that they can fight faithfully and well." Glover by degrees increased the force by six hundred men, who were a sort of militia, while a hundred armed police were the permanent force. They were placed under his command, and Major Downes says: "Glover must therefore be looked upon as the father of the W.A.F.F.'s. Little did he know that in fifty years' time the force which he nurtured in its infancy would be called upon to fight a great and powerful European nation in three different theatres of war, namely, Togoland, the Cameroons, and German East Africa, and in each of these three theatres be victorious." As time went on the Hausa "Militia" became a force of the past, and a regular armed force, known at first as the Lagos Hausa Constabulary, was raised. This force saw much active service, both at home and overseas, taking a most active part, under Capt. Glover, in the Ashanti War of 1873–74. "The Hausa Constabulary, later the Lagos Battn. W.A.F.F., became the 2nd Southern Nigeria Regt. in 1905, the Southern Nigeria Regt. in 1911, and re-divided again in 1914 into the 3rd and 4th Nigeria Regt. In its ranks have served many famous black warriors, from the time of the native officer Yakubu, who was known in 1879 as the 'Father of the Hausas,' to Sergt.-Major Sumanu, with his five medals, both of our time. The Calabar Battn. of the Southern Nigeria Regt. descended from the forces of the Oil Rivers Protectorate, and part of the Royal Niger Constabulary, later known as the 3rd Nigeria Regt., prior to 1911 was known as the 1st Southern Nigeria Regt., but was amalgamated in that year with the 2nd Southern Nigeria Regt. into one regiment under the command of Lieut.-Colonel Cunliffe, who became Commandant of the Southern Nigeria Regt. On the 1st Jan. 1914, the battalion became the 3rd Nigeria Regt. The chief actions that the Southern Nigeria Regt. have taken part in since 1899 are: The Ashantee War of 1900; the Benin River Patrol; the Brass River Patrol; the Benin City Massacre Punitive Patrol; the Aro Expedition; the Okitsha Hinterland and Asaba Hinterland Expeditions; various Munshi Expeditions; the Ijebu Ode Expeditions; various Soukwala and other Pagan districts Expeditions and Patrols. The Northern Battn. of the Nigeria Regt. dates back to the days of the Oil Rivers Protectorate and the Niger Coast Protectorate. They were originally an irregular armed police, employed by the Royal Niger Company to protect their trade both by land and river. Later they became a disciplined regular force, known as the Royal Niger Constabulary." This body of men was later incorporated into the West African Field Force, and subsequently became the 1st and 2nd Nigeria Regts. In 1900 Sir Frederick Lugard sent and expeditionary force to represent Northern Nigeria in the Ashantee War. "There is no doubt that Sir James Willcocks, who commanded the troops in Ashantee, placed special reliance on the Northern Nigeria troops, to judge by the honours list of that campaign. Capt. Melliss was wounded no less than four times in three months, and was awarded the Victoria Cross, whilst Bugler Moma and Private Ojo Oyo both received the D.C.M." In the King's Speech at the opening of Parliament reference was made to the endurance and gallantry of the native troops of Nigeria, so ably commanded by Sir James Willcocks and led by British officers. On the 23rd of July, 1901, Sir James Willcocks resigned the appointment of Commandant of the Northern Nigeria Regt., and his place was taken by Colonel Morland. "In 1902 Northern troops were sent to assist the Southern Nigeria Regt. in the Aro Expedition, under command of Lieut.-Colonel Festing, D.S.O. In 1903 the towns of Kano and Sakoto were captured by Colonel Morland's Expedition, and formed the subject of mention in the King's Speech at the opening of Parliament on 17 Feb. 1903. Colonel Morland advanced on Zaria on 29 Jan. 1903, and in seven weeks had captured both these great towns, had fought four important engagements at Babeji, Kano, Sokoto, and again near Rawia against a Kano Army. The hardships during this expedition were very great, and many native soldiers and carriers died of cold and lack of water. During this year there first came into being the Mounted Infantry Battn., which was later known as the 5th Nigeria Regt. This year was a year of war for the W.A.F.F." which was engaged in many minor operations in addition to the Kano–Sokoto Expedition, the most important of these being the Bunni Expeditions, during which Major March and 12 natives were killed. In 1906 came the Sokoto outbreak, when Messrs. Hillary and Scott, together with Lieut. Blackwood and twenty-five rank and file of the Mounted Infantry Company, quartered at Sokoto, lost their lives. Major Goodwin, in command of six hundred troops, eventually quelled this rising. In 1903 and 1907 the W.A.F.F. took part in several minor operations, the best known of them being the cave fighting at Margki, under command of Lieuts. Chapman and Chaytor. "From 1900 up to the outbreak of the Great War in 1914, Nigerian troops, both North and South, have constantly been employed on patrols and other forms of military operations. No other forces of the Crown have seen so much fighting in the same fourteen years. . . . I hope that when my readers have read this account, poorly told as it is, by an amateur writer, they will in future respect the fighting black man of Africa, for he has at least proved himself a man. We in England owe our negro fellow-subject a great debt of gratitude for all he has done for our beloved Empire. Many a native of Nigeria has trekked his last trek and fought his last fight far away from his own land for the sake of the Empire. . . . The length of a man's life is not told in words, but in actions, irrespective of colour, race or creed; and until the 'Cease Fire' sounds on all fronts the W.A.F.F. will continue to sacrifice themselves willingly on the altar of duty, side by side with their different brothers of the Empire, for the sake of that Empire that has given them freedom, justice and all that makes life worth living. I personally feel it an honour to have served with such gallant troops, who at all times have been brave, chivalrous and cheerful, in spite of all they have been called upon to undergo. One realizes the truth in those four lines of Kipling after having served in action with these gallant fellows:

"'Oh, East is East, and West is West, and never the twain shall meet,
Till earth and sky stand presently at God's great judgment seat;
But there is neither East nor West, Border nor Breed nor Birth,
When two strong men stand face to face, tho' they come from the ends of the earth!'"

Major Downes gives an account of the foundation of the German Colony in East Africa in 1884, by Karl Peters & Co. He then tells us how from the outbreak of war in 1914 the first phase of the campaign against German East Africa lasted until the beginning of 1916. The second phase began when General Smuts assumed command of the forces in the field, and lasted to the crossing of the Rufiji by British troops. The third phase, from early January, 1917, till the Germans crossed into Portuguese territory. The fourth phase was the campaign continued in Portuguese East Africa. Major Downes describes the fighting up to the time when General Hoskins, who had been in command of a column, "took over the forces in East Africa on the 20th Jan. 1917. At this time the effective strength of the enemy's forces was put down at 1,100 Europeans and 7,300 Askaris, with 4 guns of 4-inch or 4.1 calibre, 16 smaller guns, and 73 machine guns. In the light of what took place later, I think these numbers were underestimated. At one time it was hoped the supply question would be solved by using the Rufiji river for transport purposes, but this idea was very soon given up, for the river rose into a huge torrent with a speed of 20 miles an hour. At the end of January the situation of the Rufiji was most gloomy. The supply and transport situation was bad; there was no reserve of food in the advance depôt; the number of carriers was not nearly sufficient; pack animals died after a single journey, if not before; mechanical transport drivers far back on the lines of communication were so rapidly falling sick that hundreds of light cars stood for days without doing one journey. General Hoskins therefore withdrew from the river area all the troops he could." The following is an extract from General Hoskins's official Despatch, dated 30 May, 1917, but not published till 27 Dec. 1917: "All seemed to be going well when, on 25 Jan., heavy rain began to fall, ushering in the wettest season known in East Africa for many years. By the 27th the lines of communication from Mikesse to Kibambawe were interrupted by the washing away of bridges and the flooding of roads; and operations in all areas were henceforward seriously hampered by the untimely rain. It is perhaps hard to realize the difficulties which the rainy season in East Africa entailed for a force acting from such widely separated bases, with several different lines of communication running through every variety of difficult country, and necessitating in some cases as much as 130 miles of porter transport. In the Mgeta and Rufiji valleys, roads constructed with much skill and labour, over which motor transport ran continuously in January, were traversed with difficulty and much hardship by porters wading for miles in water above their waists. The Dodoma–Iringa line of communications crossed the great Ruaha in the dry weather by an easy ford; when the rain had really set in, supplies had to be transported not only over a flooded river, but also a swamp on each side of it six feet deep and as many miles wide. Considerable anxiety was caused by this extensive flooding across the Dodoma–Iringa communication, and every effort was made to cope with this. The Iringa Column was kept as small as possible, and special flat-bottomed boats were prepared, but eventually it became necessary to switch on to a new line along the road which runs south from the railway at Kilossa. The valley of the Rufiji and its various tributaries became a vast lake, in which the true courses of the streams were often only discernible with difficulty, if at all. Patrol work had to be carried out for some time in canoes, and the men found themselves making fast to the roofs of houses which had lately formed their quarters. The conditions of the Kilwa area were equally trying, as roads became impassable for motor transport, and animals died a few weeks after being landed. An even more serious factor, perhaps, was the sickness amongst the troops. The coastal belt and the valleys of the Mgeta and Rufiji even in dry weather are unhealthy for all but the indigenous African, and during the rains there is a great increase in malaria, while dysentery and pneumonia strike down even the African native. In 1916 many of our troops in East Africa spent the rain season in high and comparatively healthy localities. It was impossible to do this in 1917 without withdrawing from ground which had been hardly won and out of which the enemy would have to be driven again with equal difficulty, should he be allowed to reoccupy it. That the enemy had also to contend with sickness, and with sameness, if not with scarcity, of food, is certain; but in a minor degree, since his white men were more acclimatized to German East Africa, and his native soldiers indigenous to the country. He had the advantage of falling back on interior lines; of veteran troops from whose ranks nearly all waverers had by this time been eliminated; and of his power of living on the country as he retired. This last was accentuated by the fact that whereas we are accustomed to take and pay for only what the villagers can spare, the Germans have no scruples about taking all. And after using men, women and children as porters, so far as they require, they send them back in a starving condition, thus increasing the difficulties of our advancing troops." Major Downes describes the operations during the rains, and the hardships suffered by both European and native troops are evident from an extract from General Hoskins's Despatch up to the 30th of May: "Meanwhile the feeding of the various columns was a source of much anxiety to me and to all my Column Commanders. As the rains increased in the Kilwa area, the animals died of fly, and light mechanical transport work became impossible; porter transport had gradually to be adopted inland, and a system of dhows and boats up to riverhead on the Matandu river was instituted. Portions of the 1st Division located at Mohoro and subsequently at Utete were supplied by river transport up the Rufiji, under arrangements with the Navy, and the river became the main line of supplies for all troops in that area. The maintenance of the troops in the Iringa area by the Dodoma–Iringa line had become so precarious that in March the Kilossa–Iringa line had to be adopted, though it involved heavy casualties among porters and donkeys, and much sickness among the white personnel. It was not until May that weather conditions again permitted of the Dodoma–Iringa line being used. Difficulties of supply through the low-lying country between Kibambawe and the Uluguru uplands steadily increased, so that the troops were frequently on half rations. I therefore hastened the withdrawal of the remainder of General Beves' force to recuperate and refit. Sickness amongst Europeans and South African units had assumed such proportions as to necessitate their withdrawal to recuperate. I decided to send as many as possible to South Africa, and to recall them for offensive operations after the rains. The hardships of the campaign and the brunt of the fighting since 1914 had been borne by some Indian units, and by the King's African Rifles. These had also suffered severely from sickness, especially the Indians, but units were so weak as to make it impossible to withdraw any of the King's African Rifles, and only certain of the Indians were able to be sent to healthier ground to recuperate."

Major-General Hoskins commanded the 3rd Division, Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force, Egyptian Expeditionary Force, from 19 Aug. 1917. He was promoted to Lieutenant-General, and was created a K.C.B. in 1919. Sir Arthur Hoskins commanded the North Midlands Territorial Force from 1919.

Charles Davies Vaughan.

VAUGHAN, CHARLES DAVIES, Capt., was born at Brynog, Cardiganshire, 22 Aug. 1868, son of the late Capt. Herbert Vaughan, late 68th Regt., and of Mrs. Vaughan, of Whittington, Worcester. Capt. Herbert Vaughan, himself a most delightful man, was one of the pupils, at Cheltenham College, of the late Capt. Adam Durnford Gordon, whom the late Colonel Cunliffe Martin described as "exactly like Colonel Newcome." On pages 139–140 of "Adam Lindsay Gordon and His Friends in England and Australia," published in 1912 by Messrs. Constable, and written by Edith Humphris and Douglas Sladen, we get some glimpses of Capt. Gordon and his pupil, Herbert Vaughan, as well as of Lindsay Gordon: "Capt. Herbert Vaughan was a pupil of Capt. A. D. Gordon's. He still keeps a silver pencil-case in his pocket which he says Capt. Gordon gave him, not as a prize but by way of encouragement to do better. Capt. Vaughan says that Capt. Gordon was a very charming man and tremendously clever, and was said to talk Hindustani like a native. He would not call him a disciplinarian or very cut out for a schoolmaster. He was a most thorough old gentleman, and tried to manage the boys by kindness and trusting them to do their work—which does not always answer with such creatures. They were all very fond of him. Inez Gordon used very often to come and fetch her father home from the College. Capt. Vaughan may have spoken to her, but he doesn't remember ever doing so. When asked if he thought her good-looking, he said, 'No; at any rate her good looks didn't appeal to us boys; she was very, very tall and lanky —like a yard of pump-water, in fact.' Gordon was never at the College when Capt. Vaughan was there, and he never remembers seeing him. But he has heard a good deal about him from friends who were actually at the College with Gordon. He says that though Gordon was not formally expelled, he always understood that Capt. Gordon was told he had better remove Lindsay. Capt. Vaughan thinks this was because Gordon used to go off in school hours to ride in steeplechases, and that he did this not once but several times. He was a rather wild sort of boy, but with no real harm in him. He has heard that Gordon was far gone in consumption, practically dying, in fact, at the time he shot himself." Capt. and Mrs. Herbert Vaughan had six sons, all in the Navy or Army. Charles Davies Vaughan was educated at Cherbourg Naval College (May, 1880, to Aug. 1881), and at the U.S. College, Westward Ho! (Sept. 1881, to Dec. 1887). He was gazetted to the Border Regt. 8 June, 1889, as Second Lieutenant, and became Lieutenant 11 Nov. 1891. He was employed as a District Commissioner in Orange River Colony from Nov. 1900, to Feb. 1901, and with the S.A.C. from 1 March, 1901, to 28 Feb. 1906. He accompanied the 1st Battn. Border Regt., as Second-in-Command, to the Dardanelles, and was killed in action at the landing on 26 April, 1915. Major Vaughan had married, on 14 Aug. 1913, at Maymyo, Burma, Dorothy Jean, daughter of the late Ernest Ashley, Esq., and Mrs. Ashley, of Staines.

JOLY DE LOTBINIÈRE, HENRY GUSTAVE, Brevet Major, was born 10 March, 1868, son of the late Sir Henry de Lotbinière, grandson of Gaspard Joly, Seignior of Lotbinière, and of Louisa Josepha Gowan, and great-grandson of the last Marquis de Lotbinière. He was educated at Bishop's College School, Lennoxville, and at the Royal Military College, Kingston, Canada; was gazetted, as Second Lieutenant, to the Royal Engineers 28 June, 1888. He served for five months on Fortification Work at Gibraltar, 1890; became Lieutenant 28 June, 1891; proceeded to India early in 1891, and was employed on the Rawalpindi Water Supply, 1891–92; then on the Frontier at Gilgit for two years, opening up the country. After a year's furlough (1905) he returned to India. He was employed in Somaliland, as Resident Engineer, for nearly a year. In 1906 he transferred from Military Works to Public Works, and was employed at Nagpur, Central Provinces, as Executive Engineer, most of the time on Famine Relief Work. He served on the North-West Frontier of India, 1897–98, and took part in the operations on the Samana and in the Kurram Valley (Medal with two clasps); served at Tirah, 1897–98, in the action of Dargai; at the capture of the Sampagha Pass (clasp). He was employed at the War Office in 1899; became Captain 28 June, 1899; served in the South African War, 1899–1902, as Staff Officer to Sir Percy Girouard, 1900–1, on railways. He was transferred to Sir John Maxwell's Staff, to form a Native Refugee Department. During this campaign he took part in the advance on Kimberley. He was present during the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900; in the Transvaal in June, 1900; in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria, July to 29 Nov. 1900, and in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1900. mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; received the Brevet of Major 29 Nov. 1900; the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Henry Gustave Joly de Lotbinière, Capt. and Brevet Major, Royal Engineers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He returned to England in 1903, and served in the Somaliland Campaign, 1903–4, in charge of a water-boring section (Medal with clasp). From 1906 to 1912 he served in Egypt in the Egyptian Survey Department (Osmanieh, 3rd Class). He served in England for three years, and was sent to France in July, 1915, where he served until Oct. 1918. For his services in the European War he was several times mentioned in Despatches; given the Brevet of Colonel 3 June, 1916, and received the Belgian Croix de Guerre. He became Lieutenant-Colonel 7 Oct. 1915 and Temporary Brigadier-General 15 Jan. 1917; returned to England in Oct 1918, and was employed as C.R.E., Cambridge District. He married, 31 March, 1902, at Newlands, Cape Town, South Africa, Mildred Louisa, daughter of Charles Seymour Grenfell and Elizabeth Grenfell (née Graham), and they have two sons: Edmond, born 17 March, 1903, and Seymour, born 21 Oct. 1905.

VAUGHAN, JOHN, Brevet Major, was born 31 July, 1871, at Nannau, Dolgelly, North Wales, son of John Vaughan, J.P., D.L., of Nannau, Dolgelly. He was educated at Eton and Sandhurst; was gazetted to the 7th Hussars 11 March, 1891; became Lieutenant 4 Sept. 1894 and served in Matabeleland, 1896, and Mashonaland, 1897, as Troop Commander in the 7th Hussars. He served with the Nile Expedition in 1898, as Troop Commander, 21st Lancers; was present at the Battle of Omdurman, and received the Medal and the Egyptian Medal with clasp. He was promoted to Captain 9 Oct. 1899, and served in the South African War, 1899–1902, on Staff (also acted as A.D.C. to G.O.C., Cavalry Division, and as D.A.A.G., Intelligence, Cavalry Division) (severely wounded); in command of a column 16 Jan. to 7 Feb. 1902; was present at the Relief of Kimberley; took part in the operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900; in the Transvaal in May and June, 1900; in the Transvaal, east of Pretoria; in Cape Colony, south of Orange River; in the Transvaal, March to 31 May, 1902; in Orange River Colony, Feb. to March, 1902; in Cape Colony, Dec. 1901, to Feb. 1902. Despatches; Brevet of Major 2 Nov. 1900; Queen's Medal with six clasps, and King's Medal with two clasps. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "John Vaughan, Brevet Major, 10th Hussars. For services during operations in South Africa." The services were as follows: On 1 April, 1902, near Springs, South Africa, when acting as Intelligence Officer to a Column, he led the Queen's Bays to capture some Boers in a deserted farm. After capturing some prisoners, this regiment was attacked at dawn by superior numbers, and fought a rear-guard action until the 7th Hussars came up and counter-attacked the enemy. Major Vaughan commanded one wing of the Bays during the retirement, after having been wounded before daylight, and subsequently advanced with a squadron of the 7th Hussars to assist them by his knowledge of the country. He continued fighting till he fainted.

Sir A. Conan Doyle says on pages 522–523 of "The Great Boer War": "One of the consequences of the successful drives about to be described in the Orange River Colony was that a number of the Free Staters came north of the Vaal in order to get away from the extreme pressure upon the south. At the end of March a considerable number had reinforced the local commandos in that district to the east of Springs, no very great distance from Johannesburg, which had always been a storm centre. A cavalry force was stationed at this spot which consisted at that time of the 2nd Queen's Bays, the 7th Hussars, and some National Scouts, all under Colonel Lawley of the Hussars. After a series of minor engagements east of Springs, Lawley had possessed himself of Boschman's Kop, eighteen miles from that town, close to the district which was the chief scene of Boer activity. From this base he dispatched upon the morning of 1 April three squadrons of the Bays under Colonel Fanshawe, for the purpose of surprising a small force of the enemy which was reported at one of the farms. Fanshawe's strength was about three hundred men. The British cavalry found themselves, however, in the position of the hunter who, when he is out for a snipe, puts up a tiger. All went well with the expedition as far as Holspruit, the farm which they had started to search. Commandant Pretorius, to whom it belonged, was taken by the energy of Major Vaughan, who pursued and overtook his Cape cart. It was found, however, that Alberts's commando was camped at the farm, and that the Bays were in the presence of a very superior force of the enemy. The night was dark, and when firing began it was almost muzzle to muzzle, with the greatest possible difficulty in telling friend from foe. The three squadrons fell back upon some rising ground, keeping admirable order under most difficult circumstances. In spite of the darkness the attack was pressed fiercely home, and with their favourite tactics the burghers rapidly outflanked the position taken up by the cavalry. The British moved by alternate squadrons on to a higher rocky kopje on the east, which could be vaguely distinguished looming in the darkness against the sky-line. B squadron, the last to retire, was actually charged and ridden through by the brave assailants, firing from their saddles as they broke through the ranks. The British had hardly time to reach the kopje and to dismount and line its edge when the Boers, yelling loudly, charged with their horses up the steep flanks. Twice they were beaten back, but the third time they seized one corner of the hill and opened a hot fire upon the rear of the line of men who were defending the other side. Dawn was now breaking, and the situation most serious, for the Boers were in very superior numbers and were pushing their pursuit with the utmost vigour and determination. A small party of officers and men whose horses had been shot covered the retreat of their comrades, and continued to fire until all of them, two officers and twenty-three men, were killed or wounded, the whole of their desperate defence being conducted within from thirty to fifty yards of the enemy. The remainder of the regiment was now retired to successive ridges, each of which was rapidly outflanked by the Boers, whose whole method of conducting their attack was extraordinarily skilful. Nothing but the excellent discipline of the overmatched troopers prevented the retreat from becoming a rout. Fortunately, before the pressure became intolerable, the 7th Hussars with some artillery came to the rescue and turned the tide. The Hussars galloped in with such dash that some of them actually got among the Boers with their swords, but the enemy rapidly fell back and disappeared. In this very sharp and sanguinary cavalry skirmish the Bays lost eighty killed and wounded out of a total force of 270. To stand such losses under such circumstances, and to preserve absolute discipline and order, is a fine test of soldierly virtue. The adjutant, the squadron leaders, and six out of ten officers were killed or wounded. The Boers lost equally heavily. Two Prinsloos, one of them a commandant, and three field-cornets were among the slain, with seventy other casualties. The force under General Alberts was a considerable one, not fewer than six hundred rifles, so that the action at Holspruit is one which adds another name of honour to the battle-roll of the Bays. It is pleasing to add that in this and the other actions which were fought at the end of the war our wounded met with kindness and consideration from the enemy."

His D.S.O. was gazetted 31 Oct. 1902: "John Vaughan, Capt. and Brevet Major, 7th Hussars. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." SHELTON, WILLINGTON AUGUSTUS DAVID, Major, was born 14 May, 1849, eldest son of the late Colonel J. R. W. Shelton, of Bruree House, Limerick. He joined the 3rd Royal West Surrey Regt.; served in the South African War, 1900–2; was mentioned in Despatches twice; received the Queen's Medal with clasp; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Willington Augustus David Shelton, Major, 3rd Battn. Royal West Surrey Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Lieut.-Colonel W. A. D. Shelton married (1st), in 1877, May, daughter of Henry Goodlake; (2ndly), Victoria, daughter of John Chancellor, and (3rdly), in 1889, Florence, daughter of Edward Campbell, of Stapleton, Gloucester. He died 14 June, 1909.

DOUGLAS, WILLIAM CHARLES, Major, was born on the 18th June, 1862, son of the late William Douglas, of Brigton, County Angus, and Ellen, daughter of the late John Thomas Rigge, of Hawkshead, Lancashire. Brigadier-General W. C. Douglas is eleventh in direct descent from father to son, from Archibald "Bell-the-Cat," fifth Earl of Angus, being descended from James, second son (eldest by his second wife) of Sir Archibald Douglas, of Glenbervie, Kincardineshire, the eldest son, Sir William, becoming ninth Earl of Angus. This Sir Archibald Douglas—who died in 1570—was the common ancestor of the present Duke of Hamilton; of the present Earl of Home (on the female side), and of the extinct Earls of Forfar, the second and last of whom fell fighting under the Royal banner at Sheriffmuir, having received no fewer than sixteen broadsword wounds, besides a pistol shot in the knee. James Douglas (born 1761)—great-grandson of the eleventh Earl of Angus, and first Marquis of Douglas—raised the Cameronians in 1689 (12 May)—he being their first Colonel—and was killed at their head, at Steinkirk, when but 21 years of age, 3 Aug. 1692. To this day the Cameronians carry as their badge the mullet (French, molette—the spur-rowel), the chief and ancient charge of the Douglas coat of arms, and they have—except for a short period—since 1881, worn the Douglas tartan. The time when they did not do so was when the militia regiments lost their distinct character as county battalions and matters were not quite fixed up as to the uniform, when they first became third and fourth battalions of the line regiments. During this interregnum a "fancy" tartan was used for a short period by both line and militia regiments, after which the Douglas tartan was adopted by the Cameronians, doubtless in recognition of their origin, when, by the Marquis of Douglas, "1,200 men were enrolled in one day, without beat of drum and without levy money." Sir William Douglas, K.C.B. (General W. C. Douglas's great-uncle), commanded the Highland Brigade at Waterloo, while his brother, Graham Douglas, accompanied Sir John Moore in the famous retreat on Corunna, taking part in the "ceaseless rear-guard fighting which marked every step of the retreat." Such was Sir John Moore's opinion of William Douglas and others of his brothers that he made application to their father for "more of the breed" for his regiment, promising advantageous conditions of joining up, could they be provided. To this Sir William Douglas a monument was erected by his brother officers in the church at Forfar, as a tribute of "their respect and esteem for his distinguished services in the field" and of his "amiable qualities in private life." "He fell an early victim to the duties of his profession at Valenciennes, in France, on the 23rd Aug. 1818, aged 42 years, universally regretted by all who knew him." William Charles Douglas was educated at the Royal Naval School, New Cross, and at Cheltenham College; spent some years in the United States, and joined the Royal Lanark Militia, as Second Lieutenant, on 4 June, 1881, the year of the inauguration of the Territorial System, upon its adoption the 1st and 2nd Lanark Militia becoming the 3rd and 4th Battns. The Cameronians. He became Lieutenant, the 4th Scottish Rifles, on 1 July, 1881; Captain 26 Sept. 1885, and Major, 3rd Scottish Rifles, 25 Dec. 1895. As Senior Major he commanded a battalion at Aldershot, and was in charge of the detachment in London on the occasion of the Jubilee Celebration in 1897. He served during the South African War in 1901–2, as Commandant at Boshof, Orange River Colony, and in acting command of his battalion, the 3rd Cameronians, from June, 1901, to May, 1902, which had fifteen months' experience of the war; and took part in the operations in Cape Colony and the Orange River Colony. For his services in this campaign, Major Douglas was mentioned in Lord Kitchener's Despatches [London Gazette, 29 July, 1902]; was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 6 Dec. 1902; received the Queen's Medal and four clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "William Charles Douglas, Major, the Cameronians (Scottish Rifles). In recognition of services during the recent operations in South Africa." The decoration was awarded for continuous good service during the war. He commanded the 3rd Battn. Scottish Rifles from 6 Dec. 1902, to 20 May, 1908, and was granted an extension of command for two years, but did not take advantage of it, and was granted the honorary rank of Colonel 27 April, 1908. He retired 20 May, 1908. In the European War Colonel Douglas commanded the 2/5th Black Watch (Royal Highlanders) from 27 Sept. 1914, to 15 Jan. 1915, and commanded the 194th Infantry Brigade from 15 Jan. 1915, to 17 March, 1916. For services in the war he was granted the honorary rank of Colonel in the Army [London Gazette, 12 April, 1917]; the honorary rank of Brigadier-General [London Gazette, 10 Aug. 1917]; was invested with the Insignia of Companion of the Most Honourable Order of the Bath (Military Division) 9 Feb. 1918, and has held the post of County Commandant Forfarshire Volunteer Regt. since 24 July, 1917. Brigadier-General Douglas's favourite recreations are shooting and fishing. He married, in Aug. 1892, Jeannette (who died 2 Dec. 1916), second daughter of the late P. Hutchison, Esq., Shipowner, of Glasgow, and they had four daughters.

BENNETT, ALFRED CHARLES, Lieut.-Colonel, the son of the late St. John Bennett, Barrister-at-Law, of Colewood Park, Sussex, and of 31, Cambridge Square, S.W. He was educated privately, and joined the Army on 19 July, 1876. He served in South Africa, 1899–1902; was mentioned in Despatches; received both Medals and one clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Alfred Charles Bennett, Major and Hon. Lieut.-Colonel, West Yorkshire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was Commandant of Boer Prisoners of War at Simon's Town; Commandant of Kimberley for part of the time the battalion was there, and Officer Commanding troops at Worcester, Cape Colony. He subsequently retired, and joined the Reserve of Officers. Directly war broke out in 1914 he applied for employment, and was appointed Recruiting Officer at Southend, which post he held until his death. He died 16 Jan. 1915, at Ardleigh Park, Colchester. He had married, in 1886, Emma Charlotte, daughter of Lieut. F. Vere-Hopegood, of Hadley (late of the 70th Regt.), and widow of Lieut. Wilmot Lambert, Rifle Brigade, of Banstead, Surrey.

He was several times mentioned in Despatches, and promoted to Brigadier-General Commanding 56th Brigade, 19th Division, and made a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel. He was killed in action when in the trenches at Hébuterne on 28 Jan. 1917.

Walter Long.

His Majesty the King wrote: "The Queen and I are deeply grieved to hear that your son has been killed in action after such a distinguished career, and in the prime of youth. I regret that my Army has lost one of its promising young Generals."

H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught wrote: "In Toby the Army and the Scots Greys have lost a splendid officer, who has always set the finest example and whose name will long be remembered. His has been a glorious death, falling in action in command of his Brigade."

Field-Marshal Sir Douglas Haig wrote: "As the General under whom he was directly serving will have told you, his death deprives the Army of one of our best Brigadiers. As a soldier he was so practical, and thoroughly up to his work. I always felt he was sure to attain high rank, and, as a man, he was loved and admired by us all for his manly straightforward ways."

At a meeting held in furtherance of the War Loan in the City Town Hall, Mr. Walter Long was the chief speaker. "The Colonial Secretary, who had a very sympathetic reception, said it was no secret that an event which had occurred this week in his domestic circle would in ordinary circumstances have led him to choose seclusion rather than appearance on a public platform; but he felt that it was his duty to come to the meeting in order to spread the lesson that they must all put their backs into the war in order to bring it to a triumphal conclusion. He had this further incentive that his wife and daughter-in-law desired him to come in order to say that their one thought was that the people of this country should not hesitate to do their duty. A still stronger incentive was the knowledge that there had come to him from the son whose loss he should deplore as long as he lived a message, silently given, that nothing should prevent him doing his duty. Until we at home realized the issue of this war, depended on ourselves and on the sacrifices that we were prepared to make, we should not have the determination that was necessary to make our cause triumphant. It was pitiful and almost incredible that at a time like the present men should have to be searched for and dug out in order to obtain their services. It was not because they were not patriotic or ready to serve, but because of the widespread prevalence of the idea that everything that was necessary was being done. Since he had been at the Colonial Office he had been very much struck by the liberality and spontaneity of the contributions from various parts of the Empire where money was none too plentiful. Recently separate contributions of £800, £200 and £20 had been received from three native treasury chests in Northern Nigeria, accompanied by expressions of fervent hope for our victory over Germany. With such examples before us, surely we, who had taken real liberty and real freedom into the countries over which we ruled, would give our last penny in order that these priceless assets might not only remain with us, but might be handed down unimpaired to those who came after. We were profiting by what our forefathers had done. Let us take care that our children should profit by what we were doing to-day. It was the duty of all to give to the Government every penny they could possibly spare, in order that our sailors and soldiers might have the reward they so much desired, namely, the winning of this war speedily. In talking matters over with a dear old friend, he had come to the conclusion that he might help those whom he was addressing to realize what duty really was if he referred to the example of the son whom he had lost. He was a very true Knight, sans peur et sans reproche; he lived his whole life for one thing, and one thing alone—duty—and he died as he had lived. The General Officer Commanding his son's division had written of him: 'And now he is gone to join that gallant band to which we have all contributed, and will contribute without fear. They are never far from us out here—the gallant dead—they watch our progress keenly and cheer us by their memory and example.' A fine thought for all of us to-day! That as the gallant dead are not gone but are cheering on their comrades to victory, so must they be cheering us on here to still greater effort, not blaming us, not reproaching us, but telling us, in voices to which our ears cannot be deaf, that it is our bounden and sacred duty to do our utmost to help our country in her time of difficulty and trial."

Lieut.-Colonel Long was Champion Light Weight Boxer, and twice won the Middle Weight Boxing Championship of the British Army. He married, in 1910, the Hon. Sibell Johnstone, eldest daughter of Lord Derwent and Ethel (who died in 1901), eldest daughter of Capt. H. Strickland, late of the Life Guards, and there is one son.

War he served in the 1st Battn., being Regimental Transport Officer in the earlier stages, and Adjutant in the latter part of the war; he continued to hold this position afterwards until 1904. He was present at the operations in Natal, 1899; at the Relief of Ladysmith, including the action at Colenso, and actions of Spion Kop and Vaal Kranz; operations on the Tugela Heights; action at Pieter's Hill; operations in the Orange Free State; in the Transvaal, east and west of Pretoria; in the Orange River Colony, and in Cape Colony, north and south of Orange River. For his services in this campaign he was twice mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901, and 29 July, 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with five clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "William Lynn Allen, Capt., The Border Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." From Sept. 1905, to Sept. 1909, he was Adjutant of the Discharge Depôt, and he received his Majority in Oct. 1913, in the 2nd Battn., in which he had commanded a company. Early in Oct. 1914, he went to the front with the 7th Division, which defended the town of Ypres from 19 Oct. to 6 Nov. On the evening of 28 Oct. he was holding a point between the villages of Krusik and America, about 4½ miles from Ypres. For the previous seven days, Major Lynn Allen had been occupying with his men a salient point at the extreme left of his regiment, and his company were badly in need of reinforcements. On that particular night about 100 of the enemy made their way over trenches occupied by a neighbouring battalion, and appeared in the vicinity of a farmhouse in the rear of the Borders. After an interchange of firing, a considerable number were killed, and immediately afterwards the remainder signified their wish to surrender, asking for an English officer. In response Major Lynn Allen left his trench with two men, and had hardly advanced a step or more before the enemy treacherously opened fire, and he fell back mortally wounded. His C.O. in South Africa, Lieut.-Colonel Ovens, now Brigadier-General, states: "No officer of the battalion was more gallant and devoted, and it is doubtful if any other gave such valuable services as he did as Transport Officer and Adjutant." Major Bosanquet, the senior surviving officer of his battalion at Ypres, wrote of him as being "an exceptionally capable officer, and a very great loss to the regiment." On 8 June, 1898, at St. Peter's Church, Woking, Surrey, Major Allen married Adeline Miriam, second daughter of Isaac Garbutt Dickinson, and they have three children: Bulkeley Garbutt Lynn, born 20 July, 1899: Esmond Harcourt Lynn, born 22 Aug. 1903, and Sylvia Pomona Lynn, born 15 Oct. 1907.

as a Colour-Sergeant in the 55th Regt., being wounded at Bunker Hill, and also in the Peninsular War. South African boys of my age were born and lived for years in an atmosphere of warfare and inured to danger and hardships, as also subsequently, which has made our South African lads what they are. I have commanded Regulars and troops from New Zealand and Australia, who are all fine and brave men, but none so adaptable, so mobile, as our South Africans, who have done many daring and gallant acts in our South African War. I allude to English and Dutch combined. I first saw active service when I fought at the age of 19 or 20 in the Free State War of 1865, with the Basutos, when I served as a trooper in the Bloemfontein Rangers (O.F.S. Republican Forces). I commanded the Rustenburg Rifles, a local corps raised in Rustenburg, Transvaal Republic, in 1876, with the late Thomas Burgher, the President of the Transvaal, in command of his bodyguard. I was Second-in-Command of the Border Horse, under Colonel Weatherley, under Colonel Sir E. Wood in Zululand in 1879, and when they were practically wiped out and both Colonel Weatherley and his son fell at Hlobane on 28 March, was promoted to the command, with the rank of Commandant and Colonel's pay (Zululand Medal); served under Sir Garnet Wolseley in Secocolm's Country (in the Boer War of 1891), as Commandant, commanding Border Horse; raised troops on two occasions in Bechuanaland; defeated the natives during the Rebellion of Mashonwing River, Bechuanaland; captured the rebel chief Golishwe—who caused the rising—in the Kalahan Desert, and thus stopped what might have been a prolonged and costly rising to the Cape Government (Bechuanaland Medal); raised Dennison's Scouts, and served with them as O.C., with the Irregular Mounted Forces in the Boer War of 1899–1902. I cannot give particulars as to which particular act gained me the D.S.O. Got the Column—known as the Kimberley Column—out of difficulties on different occasions during the Boer War." He received the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Charles George Dennison, Capt., South African Mounted Irregular Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He rose to the rank of Major. Major Dennison had four grandsons fighting in the European War, two of whom were severely wounded. He is particularly fond of hunting. Most of this has been done in Mashonaland and Matabeleland. He often met the late Major F. C. Selous, D.S.O., the great hunter, and knew him well. He married, 29 Aug. 1867, at Aliwal North, Annie M. Hoffman, descendant on her mother's side of the De Villiers family of French Huguenots, and their children were: Alexander George, who fell in the Boer War; Lillie Elizabeth; Annie Mary; Clifford, who fell in the Boer War; Harold James; Emmie, and Frederick Weatherley.

WISHART, ROBERT, Capt., was born on 12 Sept. 1875, at Barry Reef, Victoria, Australia, son of Harry and Alena Wishart. He was educated at Allendale, Victoria, and joined the Army, as a private, in Nov. 1899. He served in South Africa, 1899–1900, with Bethune's Mounted Infantry; 1900–2, with the Johannesburg Mounted Rifles. He was three times mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order—he believes, for going to the succour of Private Scott, of the Johannesburg Mounted Rifles, who was badly wounded (Capt. Wishart understood that he was recommended on that occasion for the Victoria Cross, by the O.C., Johannesburg Mounted Rifles). The award of the D.S.O. appeared in the London Gazette of 31 Oct. 1902: "Robert Wishart, Capt., Johannesburg Mounted Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Wishart commanded the Johannsburg Mounted Rifles at the Coronation of King Edward VII., and received the Coronation Medal. He is now farming in the Transvaal. He married Edith Carr, and has three children: Basil, Robert Carr and Edith Joan.

FAIRWEATHER, JAMES McINTYRE, Capt., was born at Dundee, Scotland, 13 Oct. 1876, eldest son of Joseph Fairweather, Sculptor, of Dundee, and his wife, Jane, daughter of James McIntyre, Wood Merchant, of Dundee. He was educated at the Harris Academy, Dundee, and by private tutors, and originally intended for the legal profession, but in 1896 went to South Africa, and joined the Staff of the East London Harbour Board. At the outbreak of the South African War he was Assistant Town Clerk at East London, and volunteered for active service with the Kaffrarian Rifles, receiving a commission in that Corps, later being promoted Captain and Adjutant. He was present in operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including the defence of Wepener; operatoins in Orange River Colony (May to 29 Nov. 1900), including action at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July); operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony. He was three times wounded; was mentioned in Despatches in March, 1901, and March, 1902. Doing especially good service at the Relief of Wepener and at Quaggasfontein, he also commanded the troops which entered the town when Aliwal North was ceded by the rebels. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "James McIntyre Fairweather, Capt., Cape Colony Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." At the conclusion of the war he was offered a commission in the Regular Army, but deciding to return to civil life, he accepted a position on the Headquarters Staff of the Central South African Railways, and at the time of his death held the post of Superintendent attached to the personal Staff of Sir William Hoy, General Manager of the South African Railways. At the time of the Union, he rendered valuable service as one of the special Committee who undertook the task of assimilating the general conditions of service for the administration of the entire staff (involving over 60,000 employees) of the Union Railways. He took a keen interest in military matters in South Africa, and after the Union became Commanding Officer of the Transvaal Motor and Cycle Corps, and later of the Rand Light Infantry. In 1913, during the July disturbances on the Rand, he was in military control of Bramfontein, and again during the strike in Jan. 1914, he rendered valuable services. In July, 1914, he was one of two South African officers who left for England on the invitation of the War Office to represent the Union Defence Department at the autumn army manœuvres. He arrived in England a few days after the declaration of war, and sought permission to proceed to the Western Front, but was instructed to return at once to South Africa. On the suppression of the Rebellion he proceeded to German West Africa with the Rand Light Infantry. A new regiment had to be formed in German West Africa to expedite the reconstruction of the destroyed railway line from Aus westward to Keetmanshoop, thence north to Windhuk, then south through Kalkfontein to meet the new railway line which was being built from Uppington, and all railway servants with combatant units were ordered to transfer to this. It was styled the Railway Regt., and Colonel Fairweather was given the command. He achieved splendid results under very difficult conditions, and was mentioned in Despatches in Aug. 1918, in this connection. On returning to the Transvaal several months later than the military contingent from German West Africa, he returned for a short time to his civil duties at Railway Headquarters, but later was given the command of the South African Motor Cyclist Corps, and was killed in action on 18 Feb. 1917, at Rupira, in the Livingstone Range, and is buried there. His brother, Major Joseph Fairweather, of the South Wales Borderers, was killed in action near Kut on 15 Jan. of the same year. Writing of Colonel Fairweather, Mr. H. E. M. Bourne, the Secretary of the Defence Department of South Africa, said: "The death of this officer will be a very great loss, not only to the Railway Administration, but to the Union generally, and especially to the Union Defence Forces, as he was one of the oldest and keenest of Citizen Force officers, and full of soldierly qualities. The example set by Colonel Fairweather was a very high one, and I trust and hope will long be followed by the more junior officers of the Active Citizen Force." Brigadier-General Sir Charles Crewe, K.C.M.G., C.B., M.L.A., writing of him, said: "A most gallant officer, and one for whom I have always had the greatest regard. . . . He again in West Africa showed the same gallantry and devotion to duty which was so noticeable in the 1900 campaign. He met his death, and we who all deplore his loss must also feel that he, like many others who have made the greatest sacrifice man can make, died as he would himself have chosen, in action serving the Empire." Colonel H. B. Cuming, C.B., who commanded the Kaffrarian Rifles during the South African War, wrote: "He was without doubt the most gallant fellow I ever worked with in the field. His complete indifference to shell fire and bullets amazed me. He was an excellent officer in every way, and his death is an irreparable loss to the Active Union Defence Force. In every detail of his work he was thorough and full of useful ideas," while a Railway correspondent writes of him: "The men who served under him were unanimous in their praise and liking of their Commander, whose chief anxiety at all times, even at great personal sacrifice, lay in promoting the welfare and comfort of the rank and file. . . . Quick to commend and reward good services, he was equally spontaneous in his denunciation of the bad. . . . He was a man of the most honourable and lofty principles, and the country generally, still more the Railway Administration and the military service, can ill spare him."

James M. Fairweather.

WHITEHEAD, ERNEST KILVE, Capt., was born in 1874. He served in South Africa with the Natal Volunteers, 1900–2. He was mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Queen's and King's Medals with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Ernest Kilve Whitehead, Capt., Natal Volunteers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He subsequently joined the Northern Mounted Rifles, Transvaal. Capt. He was promoted Captain 10 April, 1904, and from April, 1906, to March, 1909, was employed with the Macedonian Gendarmerie under the Foreign Office; from March, 1909, to Jan. 1911, with the Turkish Gendarmerie. He was awarded the Order of the Medjidie, 3rd Class, and in 1911 the Coronation Medal. From Sept. 1910, to Sept. 1913, he was an Adjutant of the Territorial Force, and in April, 1914, was appointed Adjutant of the 1st Battn. of his own regiment. Capt. Stephen served in the European War, and was killed in action on the 31st of Oct. 1914, just 12 years to the day after his D.S.O. was gazetted.

CLAYHILLS, GEORGE, Lieut., was born at Darlington 24 July, 1878, fourth son of Thomas Clayhills, of Invergowrie, Forfarshire, and Thornton-le-Moor, Yorkshire, by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of John Rob, of Catton, Yorkshire. He was educated at Cheltenham College, and Trinity Hall, Cambridge. He received his commission, and joined the 4th Battn. of the Cheshire Regt. 8 Sept. 1896, from which he was gazetted Second Lieutenant, 1st Battn. East Lancashire Regt., 4 Jan. 1899; and was promoted Lieutenant, 4 June, 1900, and Captain, 8 Feb. 1908; and was Adjutant of his regiment from April, 1906, to April, 1909. He went with his regiment to South Africa, and served with the 8th Mounted Infantry during the war, 1900–2, and took part in the operations at Paardeberg, and actions at Poplar Grove, Dreifontein, Karee Siding, Vet River and Zand River, and engagements near Johannesburg and Pretoria; operations in the Transvaal and Orange River Colony from Nov. 1900, to the end of the war. He was twice mentioned in Despatches (by Lords Roberts and Kitchener) [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901, and 17 Jan. 1902]; received the Queen's Medal with four clasps, and the King's Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "George Clayhills, Lieut., The East Lancashire Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was Adjutant, East Lancashire Regt., from April, 1906, to April, 1909, and became Captain 8 Feb. 1908. On the outbreak of the European War he left with his regiment for the Front in Aug. 1914, and served in France and Flanders, taking part in the Retreat from Mons, the Battles of the Marne and the Aisne. Miss Clayhills writes: "George led an attack and cleared a wood in a very fine way, 31 Oct. . . . There is an account in Conan Doyle's book of a fight the 1st East Lancashire Regt. did well in, and Colonel Lawrence wrote that my brother led his company so well that day that he forwarded his name for mention in Despatches. It never appeared—I was told so many were killed about that time that the names of nearly all the fallen were cut out. The following is Conan Doyle's account: 'The British Campaign in France and Flanders, 1914' (page 229): 'La Bassée–Armentières operations on 21 Oct.—The Germans crossed the River Lys in considerable force, and upon the morning of the 22nd they succeeded in occupying the village of Le Gheir upon the western side, thus threatening to outflank the positions of the 2nd Cavalry Division to the north. In their advance in the early morning of the 22nd they stormed the trenches held by the 2nd Inniskilling Fusiliers, this regiment enduring considerable loss. The trenches on the right were held by the 1st Royal Lancasters and 2nd Lancashire Fusiliers. These two regiments were at once ordered by General Aulay of the 12th Brigade to initiate a counter-attack under the lead of Colonel Buller. Aulay himself, who is a hard-bitten soldier, moved forward his men, while General Hunter Weston, the indefatigable blower-up of railway lines in South Africa, supported the counter-attack with the Somerset Light Infantry and the 1st East Lancashire Regt. The latter regiment, under Colonel Lawrence, passed through a wood and reached such a position that they were able to enfilade the Germans in the open, causing them very heavy losses. The action was a brilliant success. The positions lost were reoccupied and the enemy severely punished; over a thousand Germans were killed and wounded, while 300 were taken prisoners. These belonged to the 104th and 179th Saxon Regts.'" Capt. Clayhills was killed in action at the First Battle of Ypres, 2 Nov. 1914, near Armentières, and was buried about three miles north of that town and one mile east of the Ploegsteert-le-Chair Road. Capt. Clayhills was a good all-round sportsman, a good rider, fond of hunting, shooting and cricket, and, in fact, all games and sport. Three of his great-uncles fought at Waterloo; his grandfather was in the Navy guarding the Channel at the time.

He again saw active service in the Anglo-Boer War, from Dec. 1899, to the conclusion of hostilities. He was employed with the Field Intelligence Department, and was present in operations in the Orange Free State, March to May, 1900, including the defence of Wepener; operations in the Transvaal, west of Pretoria, Aug. to Nov. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, May to Aug. 1900, including actions at Wittebergen (1 to 29 July); operations in Cape Colony, south of Orange River, 1899–1900; operations in the Transvaal, Dec. 1900; operations in Orange River Colony, Nov. 1900, to March, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, 1901–2. He was awarded the D.S.O. for conspicuous gallantry at the capture of Lotter's Commando, near Petersburg, in the Graaff-Reinet district; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 20 Aug. and 15 Nov. 1901], and was personally thanked for his services by General French, who on one occasion wired to him asking him to raise a detachment for active service at a time when the Boers were becoming particularly active in Cape Colony. Such a contingent was afterwards found to be unnecessary, but the fact that he was asked to raise it showed the high opinion General French had of him. He was thanked also by Colonel H. Scobell (later Major-General Sir H. Scobell, K.C.V.O., now deceased), under whom he served during the latter part of the war as Intelligence Officer, who wrote: "Will you please keep my field-glasses as a small offering from me to you? I had always intended getting you some and having an inscription put on them, but as you have mine, I believe, keep them, please. If I had had them inscribed I should have said: 'From Colonel Scobell to Lieut. Bowers, C.M.R. As a very small token of the regard, respect and admiration felt by Colonel Scobell towards one of the bravest officers and most thorough gentlemen it has ever been his good fortune to meet.'" Lieut. Hare-Bowers received the Queen's Medal with four clasps and the King's Medal with two clasps. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Dillon Aldworth Hare-Bowers, Lieut., Cape Mounted Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." In Dec. 1904, he became Adjutant of Prince Albert's Guard, Port Elizabeth, a position which he held for two years, raising them during that time to a high state of efficiency. He was then offered promotion as Squadron Commander of his old regiment, the Cape Mounted Rifles, in Griqualand, and accepted it. He was promoted Captain 1 Dec. 1910. He carried out his military duties and those of police officer in a most efficient way, and was recommended for and obtained the position of District Officer under the Defence Scheme of 1911, the Resident Magistrate, Libode, South Africa (among many others) writing: "I have known this gallant officer all his life, and have watched his career, step by step, with great satisfaction. Capt. Bowers has served with me as Police Officer, and did excellent service in the recovery of stolen stock from the above District, and I cannot speak too highly of the services he rendered, which met with great favour from the public at the time. Capt. Bowers has a thorough knowledge of the languages, and I strongly recommend him for any position of trust." When the European War commenced Capt. Hare-Bowers saw active service once more in the German South-West African campaign, and in the Boer rebellion in 1914–15, and was awarded the Military Cross for distinguished service in the field in German South-West Africa. He commanded the 3rd Regt. South African Mounted Rifles for some months in German South-West Africa, including the rebellion of 1915, during the absence of the Commanding Officer, and was highly commended for his services by Major-General Sir H. T. Lukin, K.C.M.G., who commanded the Brigade. On the cessation of hostilities there Capt. Hare-Bowers volunteered for active service in the main theatre of war. He was attached to the Royal Fusiliers; was promoted Temporary Major 3 Feb. 1917, and served in France and Flanders in 1917 and 1918. He was promoted Major 1 Dec. 1918. Major Hare-Bowers had two brothers serving in the European War, one a Sergeant in the Cape Mounted Rifles, the other in the South African Constabulary. His favourite recreations are cricket, tennis, golf and polo. On 17 Oct. 1901, he married, at Umtata, Transvaal, South Africa, Alice, daughter of John and Alice Bishop, of Galbally, Tipperary, Ireland.

BRABANT, GUY ALFRED, Lieut., was born 6 Oct. 1873, at East London, South Africa, son of the late Major-General Sir Edward Yewd Brabant, K.C.B., C.M.G., and Lady Brabant. His father greatly distinguished himself in the Boer War, and was the head of Brabant's Horse. He was created a K.C.B., and was promoted Major-General for his services. Another son was killed during a cavalry reconnaissance from Ladysmith. G. A. Brabant joined the Army in Dec. 1900, and served in the South African War from then until 1902. He received the South African Medals with two clasps each; was promoted Captain, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Guy Alfred Brabant, Lieut., South African Mounted Irregular Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." The decoration was awarded in particular for gallantry near Pearston, Cape Colony, 10 March, 1902. While with Colonel Price's Column, Lieut. Brabant attacked a very strong position held by six Boers. He himself, with Second Lieut. Francis and Sergts. Walsh and Metcalf, shot three of the six Boers and wounded one, and also captured six horses, saddles, etc. He was mentioned in Lord Kitchener's Despatch of 1 June, 1902. He retired from the Cape Colonial Forces, as Captain, 26 Sept. 1902, and became Lieutenant, Border Light Horse, Cape of Good Hope, 25 May, 1903. Capt. Brabant is now farming in Cape Colony. His favourite recreations are cricket, tennis and shooting. On 27 Dec. 1910, at Koungha, Cape Town, Capt. Brabant married Mary Ethel Austin Reaney, eldest daughter of C. T. Reaney, of Freetown, and they have a son, Richard Brabant, born 14 Nov. 1912.

DOBRÉE, GEORGE, Lieut., was born 10 May, 1873, at St. Andrew's Rectory, Guernsey, son of the Rev. Henry Lissignol Dobrée, B.A., late Rector of St. Andrew's, Guernsey, and of Amelia, daughter of the Rev. Peter Carey, M.A., sometime Rector of St. Saviour's, Guernsey. He was left an orphan at the age of six, and was educated at King William's College, Isle of Man, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, which he entered straight from school in 1900; but owing to circumstances he resigned his cadetship and went to the Continent to study modern languages. Returning to England in 1893, he entered Caius College, Cambridge, and obtained a third-class in the Modern Languages Tripos in 1896. Throughout his Cambridge career, 1893–96, he was a very keen and enthusiastic member of the Cambridge University Rifle Volunteers, and when Captain of C Troop raised it to a high state of efficiency. It was inspected by King Edward (then Prince of Wales) in May, 1896. After leaving Cambridge he studied for the Guernsey Bar at Caen University, and volunteered, while a student there, for the South African War. He joined Paget's Horse, Jan. 1900, as Corporal in the first section of the first company, and on arrival in South Africa was gazetted to Kitchener's Horse, as Lieutenant, 12 May, 1900, and took part in the engagements at Klipriversdorp, Six Mile Spruit and Diamond Hill. On 12 June, 1900, he was appointed A.D.C. to Lieut.-Colonel Legge, D.S.O., 6th Mounted Infantry Corps, and served in the operations in the Orange Free State against De Wet. Returning to the Transvaal, the Corps became attached to the Column under General Clements, and took part in the action at Doornkloof. On 13 Dec. 1900, at Nooitgedacht, the camp was surprised in the early morning by Delarey, and Colonel Legge and other officers killed and wounded. Lieut. Dobrée assisted Colonel Legge to reinforce the piquets under heavy fire continuously (this appears in the "Times History of the War," page 96), and helped materially in initiating and facilitating the safe retirement of the Column. It was for gallantry in this action that he received his D.S.O. [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "George Dobrée, Lieut., South African Mounted Irregular Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was invested by King Edward. After further service under General French he was recommended for leave, and returned to England in Jan. 1901. In addition to the D.S.O. he received mention in Lord Kitchener's Despatch of 9 March, 1901, published in the London Gazette of 7 May, 1901, and received the Queen's Medal with clasps for Wittebergen, Diamond Hill, Johannesburg and Cape Colony. During his residence in Guernsey he became an enthusiastic officer in the Guernsey Militia Artillery, obtaining the rank of Captain. He died in Guernsey 20 July, 1907. Capt. Dobrée was a keen sportsman and an accomplished musician. He played the violin, piano and organ, but his chief forte was as a conductor. He was conductor of the Guernsey Orchestral Society. He was one of the founders of the Stade Française, R.U.F.C., and arranged for their first visit to Cambridge in 1894.

FOXCROFT, M. C., Lieut., served in the South African War of 1899–1902. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "M. C. Foxcroft, Lieut., South African Mounted Irregular Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa."

KELLY, OLIVER W., Lieut., was born in 1878, youngest son of the late Lieut.-Colonel John Lionel Kelly. He was educated at Clongowes Wood School, Ireland. He served with the West Australian Mounted Infantry from 1900 to their disbandment; then joined the Scottish Horse as a Lieutenant, and served with them in South Africa, 1900–1. He was mentioned in Despatches; was severely wounded at Wagon Drift, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Oliver W. Kelly, Lieut., 2nd Scottish Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He resigned at the end of the war.

LYLE, J. C. V., Lieut., served in the South African War, 1900–1902. He was awarded the Queen's Medal with three clasps, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "J. C. V. Lyle, Lieut., 1st Kitchener's Fighting Scouts. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He also took part in the Great War, and reached the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel (Labour Corps) 26 June, 1918. He was awarded the Military Cross and the O.B.E.

MALCOLM, JOHN ALEXANDER, Lieut., was born in 1872, son of J. F. Malcolm, of Victoria, Australia. He served in the South African War of 1899–1902. He was mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Medal, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "J. A. Malcolm, Lieut., South African Constabulary. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Capt. Malcolm married, in 1903, Mabel Jane, third daughter of Charles J. Oertel, Abraham's Kraal, Orange River Colony.

NICHOLSON, BERTRAM, Lieut., served in South Africa with the Imperial Light Horse, 1902. He was awarded the Medal, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Bertram Nicholson, Lieut., 2nd Imperial Light Horse. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was Sub-Native Commissioner, Hlatikulu, Swaziland, 1902-7; Assistant Resident Magistrate, 1904-7; Assistant Commissioner, 1907.

heath. He went to Rugby in 1895, and in 1898 he won the Wrigley Cup for his House by his own unaided efforts, winning four events—the Quarter Mile, High Jump, Weight, and Hurdles. He left the same year, and in 1899 entered the Army, through the Militia, being gazetted to the 2nd Battn. Leicestershire Regt. He saw service in Egypt, and later in South Africa, as Lieutenant and Adjutant of the Railway Pioneer Regt. He was mentioned in Lord Kitchener's Despatches (8 March, 1902), and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "William Digby Oswald, Lieut., 3rd Rly. Pnr. Regt. For services during operations in South Africa," viz.: the rescue of a Native Scout on 31 Jan., the enemy being close to him, and pursuing for some miles. So reticent was he in some matters pertaining to himself, that it is doubtful if even his most intimate friends ever knew for what special act of gallantry he was awarded this high distinction. After the South African War he began mining in South Africa. He served also as Captain and Adjutant of Royston's Horse in the Natal Rebellion in 1906, and was wounded in fierce bush fighting in Zululand. He continued mining in Rhodesia until May, 1914, and lived at Bulawayo. On the outbreak of the European War he joined the 5th Dragoon Guards (Special Reserve), as Lieutenant, on 7 Aug. 1914, and a week later went to France with the 1st Cavalry Brigade. He was in the Retreat from Mons, and took part in the Battles of the Marne and the Aisne. He was wounded at Messines on 31 Oct. 1914, and was sent home. In May, 1915, eager to get to the front again, he was attached as Captain to the Royal Field Artillery, and was with the 3rd Division in the heavy fighting round Ypres. After serving on the Staff as A.D.C. to Major-General J. A. L. Haldane, and as Assistant Provost-Marshal (for which he was mentioned in Despatches), he was, in Dec. 1915, appointed Second-in-Command of the 12th Battn. West Yorkshire Regt., and in March, 1916, took over the command. He took part in much fighting at St. Eloi, and in the early stages of the Battle of the Somme. On 14 July, 1916, the 3rd Division took part in a highly successful attack on the ridge between Bazentin-le-Petit and Longueval, and Lieut.-Colonel Oswald (his promotion was gazetted posthumously [London Gazette of Oct. 12, 1916], and also mentioned in Despatches after his death), was struck in the chest by a misfire from an English gun (a tragic incident—he had seen that the gun was wrongly focussed during the day, and had sent orders to that effect), and, after seeming to make a good recovery, sank rapidly and died on 16 July, 1916. Major-General Haldane, commanding the 3rd Division, wrote: "His loss I feel much personally, but still more as Commanding Officer, for a man like him was worth a battalion of infantry." Another officer wrote: "I always thought it an extremely sporting thing to give up a pleasant post such as Assistant Provost-Marshal, and take on infantry work in the trenches." In dedicating a memorial tablet to his memory at Victoria, Rhodesia, Canon Ashworth told how junior officers vied with each other to serve under him, and how his servant three months after Colonel Oswald's death broke down completely in describing his life in the trenches with his men and the way in which he met his death. He had lived a life of movement and adventure; he was a very good horseman, a keen polo player, and loved big game shooting in Rhodesia, but, perhaps, the Great War brought out what was best in him.

William Digby Oswald.

"One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph.
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better,
Sleep to wake."

The officers of the 5th Dragoons and his friends in the 3rd Division intend to erect a memorial, in the form of a drinking fountain for animals, in Surrey or Dorset. Lieut. Oswald had married, on 7 March, 1905, at St. John's Church, Weymouth, Dorset, Catherine Mary, daughter of the Rev. J. Scott Yardley, of St. Chad's, Shrewsbury, and Mary Yardley (maiden name, Loxdale), and there are three daughters: Theodora Betty; Ambrosine Mary, and Patricia Catherine.

SOAMES, ALFRED, Lieut., was born 16 Sept. 1862, son of the late Rev. Charles Soames, M.A., of Mildenhall, Marlborough, Wiltshire. He served in the South African War in 1901. He received the Queen's Medal with a clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Alfred Soames, Lieut., South African Mounted Irregular Forces. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Lieut. Soames served in the Great War with the 6th Battn. East Kent Regt. (The Buffs), and was killed in action 13 Oct. 1915.

STEEL, J. E., Lieut., served in the South African War in 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Queen's Medal with six clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "J. E. Steel, Lieut., South African Light Infantry. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa."

Patrick C. Dalmahoy.

DALMAHOY, PATRICK CARFRAE, Second Lieut., was born 31 Oct. 1872, at Edinburgh, son of Major-General Patrick Carfrae Dalmahoy and Emily Jane Dalmahoy, daughter of Edward Wylly, Bengal Civil Service. His father fought in the Indian Mutiny, and was present at the siege and capture of Delhi. He was educated at Haileybury College, and Edinburgh University and passed as Writer to the Signet, Edinburgh, in 1896. He joined the Mounted Infantry, City Imperial Volunteers, as a Private, for service in the South African War, 18 Jan. 1899, and was employed with them until gazetted to a commission in 1900 in the 1st Battn. The Royal Scots, with whom he served to the end of the war. Major-General Dalmahoy writes: "I have not in my possession any written account of the deed that won for him the D.S.O., but I have been told on more than one occasion by Colonel Douglas (now General Sir William Douglas), who commanded the column, that the success was in a great measure accomplished by the tactful and dashing action of the company, Royal Scots, under my son's command. The scene was the Battle of Bermondsey, in the Transvaal, 1901, I think. By order of Colonel Douglas the company was detached to turn the Boer right, and this he fully effected. He was severely wounded. I am told that he was specially mentioned by Lord Kitchener. I may mention that my son never in any way alluded to his action, and it was only through Sir William Douglas that I heard of it." Second Lieut. Dalmahoy was twice wounded; was mentioned in Despatches, awarded the King's and Queen's Medals, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Patrick Carfrae Dalmahoy, Second Lieut., The Royal Scots (Lothian) Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He resigned his commission at the end of the war, and was appointed to the Civil Service in South Africa. He was Assistant Resident Magistrate at Germiston, then Resident Magistrate at Benoni, Transvaal, and is now Resident Magistrate at Heidelberg, Transvaal. His favourite pastime is golf. He married, 25 Oct. 1911, at Edinburgh, Mabel Houston, daughter of the late W. Rogers, of Johannesburg, and they have three children: Emily Muriel, born 18 Oct. 1912; Mabel Lilias Jane, born 4 Oct. 1914, and Frances Diana Maud, born 13 Oct. 1918.

RAW, RUPERT GEORGE, Second Lieut., was born 28 July, 1880, son of George Henry Raw. He was educated at Clifton College, and Brasenose College, Oxford. He served in South Africa, 1901–2, taking part in operations in the Transvaal, Nov. 1901, to March, 1902; operations in Cape Colony, Oct. to Nov. 1901; Jan. 1902, and March to 31 May, 1902. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 29 July, 1902]; awarded the Queen's Medal with five clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Rupert George Raw, Second Lieut., The Northumberland Fusiliers. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." Lieut. R. G. Raw afterwards retired from the Service, and joined the Reserve of Officers. He served in the European War; was promoted Captain, 8th Battn. Northumberland Fusiliers. He was killed in action, Aug. 1915, in Gallipoli; was married, and left a son and a daughter.

HAMOND, PHILIP, Second Lieut., was born 1 May, 1883, son of C. A. Hamond, of Twyford Hall, East Dereham. He served in South Africa with the Mounted Infantry from 1901 to June, 1902, taking part in operations in the Transvaal, June, 1901, to May, 1902; operations in the Orange River Colony, June, 1901; operations in Cape Colony, May to June, 1901. He was given a commission in the 2nd Battn. Norfolk Regt. 7 May, 1902, after serving with the 4th Battn. from May, 1900, to May, 1902. He was dangerously wounded at Rooival; was mentioned in Despatches; awarded the Medal, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 31 Oct. 1902]: "Philip Hamond, Second Lieut., The Norfolk Regt. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa." He was promoted Lieutenant 4 Jan. 1905, and retired from the Service 20 Feb. 1909. He was subsequently placed on half pay, but rejoined for service in the European War, and was promoted Captain, Special Reserve, Norfolk Regt. 10 June, 1915. He took part in the European War from 1915 to 1918, and became a Major in the Tank Corps. He was awarded the Military Cross and a Bar to the D.S.O. In 1909 he married Rita Gladys Ethel, daughter of Charles Edward Hammond, of St. Fabian's, Newmarket served as Lieutenant in the 3rd (South Regt.) Royal Guernsey Light Infantry Militia, 1881–5. He joined the Prince of Wales's Leinster Regt. (Royal Canadians) 23 May, 1885; served with the 44th Gurkha Light Infantry, B.S.C. in the Upper Burma Campaign, 1885–7 (Medal with clasp), and 1887–9 (clasp). He was Station Staff Officer, Kohima, Naga Hills, Assam, and was brought to the notice of the Commander-in-Chief in India for his good service on detached duty by the General Officer Commanding Eastern Frontier, Bengal. He became Captain 12 Aug. 1891. He was in the Ordnance Store Department, 1891–3; D.A.C.G.O., 1893–6; Ordnance Officer, 4th Class, Army Ordnance Department, 1896–8. He served with the 1st Battn. Prince of Wales's Leinster Regt. (Royal Canadians) (100th), in the South African War, 1900–1, and was present at the action of Wittebergen (Queen's Medal and four clasps). He became Major 28 June, 1901. He served with the West African Frontier Force, 1st Battn. Northern Nigeria Regt., 1901–4; Acting Commandant and Brigade Major, Northern Nigeria Regt., West African Frontier Force. He was in command of the Kontagora Expedition, 1902, for which, in addition to mention in Despatches, he received the Medal and clasp, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 8 May, 1903]: "Major Neville Hope Campbell Dickinson, The Prince of Wales's Leinster Regt. (Royal Canadians). In recognition of services in effecting the capture of the ex-Emir of Kontagora." Major Dickinson retired from the Army 20 Dec. 1905. He was Military Resident, Province of Borgu, and J.P., Northern Nigeria, 1901 to 1904, and among the important appointments which he subsequently held was that of Mechanical Engineer of the Construction Company of the Central Uruguay Eastern Extension Railway, 1906. When the Great War began Major Dickinson became, on 6 Aug. 1914, a First Class Inspector of Mechanical Transport, Army Service Corps, and was employed in that position during the war until 8 Jan. 1918, serving in France in 1916, being brought to the notice of the Secretary of State for War for valuable services in 1917 and 1918. He has the British War Medal and the Allies' Medal. From 9 Jan. 1918, to 15 Oct. 1919, he was employed with the Army Ordnance Department and Royal Army Ordnance Corps, as Ordnance Officer, 4th and 3rd class. Major Dickinson married, in 1896, Elizabeth Frankland, second daughter of Isaac Garlbutt Dickinson, of Woking and Newcastle.

ALEXANDER, AUBREY DE VERE, Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet Colonel, was born 28 May, 1849, son of the late G. H. M. Alexander, I.C.S., and of Henrietta Ruth Maria Read. He was educated at Wellington College, and joined the Army 8 Dec. 1869. He served with the Khyber Field Force in the Afghan War of 1879–80 (Medal); became Captain 8 Dec. 1881, and Major 8 Dec. 1889; Lieutenant-Colonel 8 Dec. 1895; was given the Brevet of Colonel 8 Dec. 1899. For his services with the China Field Force in 1900–1, Colonel Alexander was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 26 June, 1903]: "Aubrey de Vere Alexander, Lieut.-Colonel and Brevet Colonel, Indian Army. In recognition of services during the occupation of China by International Troops." Colonel A. de V. Alexander was later Officiating Colonel on the Staff, Rawal Pindi. He retired from the Indian Army 15 Feb. 1908, with the rank of Colonel in the Army. During the European War Colonel Alexander served in the Intelligence Department of the War Office from 3 Oct. 1914, to 23 July, 1919. He married, in 1875, Mary Georgina Carter, daughter of the late General Sir James Brind, G.C.B.

FOSTER, WILFRID LIONEL, Capt., was born 2 Dec. 1874, at Great Malvern, son of the Rev. Henry Foster, of Malvern College, and Mrs. Henry Foster, and is a member of the well-known family of Worcestershire cricketers. He was educated at Malvern College, and joined the Royal Artillery in Nov. 1894. He served in the South African War, 1899 to 1902, and was in the advance on Kimberley, including the actions at Enslin, Modder River and Magersfontein, and the Relief of Kimberley; operations in the Orange Free State, Feb. to May, 1900, including operations at Paardeberg (17 to 26 Feb.); operations in Cape Colony, Feb. to April, 1901; operations in Orange River Colony and the Transvaal, May, 1901, to May, 1902. He received the Queen's Medal with four clasps; the King's Medal with two clasps, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 10 Sept. 1901]. He served as a Special Service Officer on the Staff in the Somaliland Campaign of 1902–3; was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 7 Aug. 1903, and 2 Sept. 1904]; received the Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 7 Aug. 1903]: "Capt. Wilfrid Lionel Foster, Royal Artillery. In recognition of services with the Boer Contingent during the recent operations in Somaliland." He retired from the Army to the Reserve of Officers in 1908, and was promoted Major, Reserve of Officers, R.H. and R.F.A., 6 May, 1915. He was created a C.B.E. in 1919. Major Foster, with his brother H. K., won the Public School Racquets in 1892 and the Racquets Amateur Doubles Championship in 1898; also the latter again in 1907 with his brother B. S. He was a member of the Corinthian Football Club. As a cricketer he was a really great batsman, and with his brothers H. K. and R. E. was responsible for raising Worcestershire to the position of a first-class county. Major Foster married in London, in Oct. 1901, Evelyn Mary Cammell, daughter of Bernard E. Cammell, of Guildford, and they have two daughters, Nancy and Molly, and one son, Wilfrid, born in July, 1915.

1903]: "Charles Henry Davies, Capt., Indian Army. For operations against the Darwesh Khel Waziris." He was promoted Major 5 Feb. 1905; served in the Zakka Khel Expedition in 1908; in the Mohmand Expedition, including the engagement at Kargha, 1908 (Despatches; Medal with two clasps). He became Lieutenant-Colonel 5 Feb. 1913. He served in the European War (in Mesopotamia), 1914–18. He was given the Brevet of Colonel 3 June, 1916; was promoted Temporary Brigadier-General on becoming Brigade Commander, 28th Infantry Brigade, Indian Expeditionary Force "D," Mesopotamian Expeditionary Force, 6 July, 1916. He was wounded; was created a C.M.G. in 1917 and a C.B. in 1919. Brigadier-General Davies married, 5 Sept. 1894, at Teignmouth, Devon, Beatrice Mary, fourth daughter of the late Christopher Sparrow, of Bitton, Teignmouth, and Urmston Lodge, near Manchester, and they have one son, Frederick Arthur Davies (Second Lieutenant, Queen's Own Corps of Guides).

BROWNE, CHARLES MICHAEL, Lieut., was born 26 Nov. 1878, son of the late Lieut.-Colonel Charles Michael Browne and of the late Sarah Josephine Browne. He was educated at the United Services College, Westward Ho! and joined the Army on 23 Dec. 1897, as a Second Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, in which he was promoted Lieutenant 23 Dec. 1900. He served in Waziristan, 1901–2 (Medal and clasp), and for his services in the operations against the Darwesh Khels, 1902, was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, June, 1903], and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order for the same services [London Gazette, 3 July, 1903]: "Charles Michael Browne, Lieut., Royal Engineers. For operations against the Darwesh Khel Waziris." He was promoted Captain 23 Dec. 1906; Major 30 Oct. 1914. Major C. M. Browne served in the European War; he was Adjutant, Royal Engineers, 7 Nov. 1914, to 1915; Acting Lieutenant-Colonel, Sept. 1916, to May, 1917, and again 2 June, 1917. For his services he was four times mentioned in Despatches; given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1916; created a C.M.G., 1918, and made a Knight of the Legion of Honour by the French. Lieut.-Colonel Browne also served in the Russian Relief Force, 1919, and was awarded the Order of St. Anne, 2nd Class, by the Russians. He married, in 1905, Isabel (died 1916), daughter of the late Gilbert Lovell Nicolay, and has one son: Charles Gordon Knight, born 27 April, 1909.

A. W. Sangmeister, Border Mounted Rifles. In recognition of services during the operations in South Africa, 1899–1900, the reward to bear date 29 Nov. 1900." He was promoted Major 16 Nov. 1904, and was placed as Lieutenant-Colonel on the Regimental Supernumerary List, Natal, 6 March, 1906. He also served in the Natal Native Rebellion in 1906, for which he received the Medal and Clasp. He has the Volunteer Decoration.

London Gazette, 11 Sept. 1903.—"The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of their services with the Kano-Sokoto Expedition. To be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order."

CUBITT, THOMAS ASTLEY, Capt. and Brevet Major, was born 9 April, 1871, youngest son of Major F. Astley Cubitt, of Thorpe Hall, Norwich. He received his first commission in the Royal Artillery 13 Feb. 1891. He served on the Staff in West Africa in 1898, in the Expeditions to Lapai and Anam (Medal and clasp); was promoted Captain 13 Feb. 1900; served in the Munshi Expedition, Northern Nigeria, 1900 (Despatches [London Gazette, 16 April, 1901]; clasp); in Northern Nigeria, 1901, in the operations against the forces of Kontagora, and in the operations against those of Bida (Despatches [London Gazette, 18 April, 1902]; Medal with clasp; Brevet of Major); in 1902 in the Bornu Expedition, Northern Nigeria, as Staff Officer in command of operations in the Bassama and Wurkum countries (Despatches [London Gazette, 24 April, 1903]; clasp). For his services in Northern Nigeria in 1903, as Staff Officer to Colonel T. L. W. Morland in the Kano–Sokoto Campaign, Major Cubitt was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 31 July, 1903]; received a clasp to the African Medal, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Sept. 1903]: "Thomas Astley Cubitt, Capt. and Brevet Major, Royal Artillery (West African Frontier Force. In recognition of services with the Kano-Sokoto Expedition." He was promoted Substantive Major, Royal Artillery, 12 Sept. 1908; was employed as Brigade Major, 3rd Cavalry Brigade, Irish Command, Feb. 1908, to May, 1911, and on 29 July, 1914, was promoted Local Lieutenant-Colonel on taking up an appointment in Somaliland. He was employed in Somaliland during the Great War until 19 Jan. 1916, becoming Substantive Lieutenant-Colonel 1 April, 1915; was Brigade Commander of the 57th Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, 6 April, 1917, to 22 May, 1918, and was Temporary Major-General Commanding the 38th Division, British Armies in France, from 23 May, 1918; confirmed in the rank of Major-General 3 June, 1919. Major-General Cubitt was given the Brevet of Colonel 1 Jan. 1918; was created a C.M.G. in 1916, and a C.B. in 1919.

DYER, STEWART BARTON BYTHESEA, Lieut. (Local Capt.), was born 26 Nov. 1875, in London, son of Capt. Stewart John Dyer, late The Buffs (youngest son of the late Sir Thomas Swinnerton Dyer, 9th Bart., of Westcroft Park, Chobham, Surrey). His parents came of old Wiltshire families; the Dyers held lands in Wilts (Heytesbury and Somerset) before 1400, most of which they lost fighting for Charles I., whose successor, Charles II., created the Baronetcy. The Dyers have been mostly soldiers, and have fought through the Peninsular and Crimean Wars and the Indian Mutiny. His mother belonged to the Bythesea family, which has owned the Weeke House estate since the time of James I. He was educated by a private tutor, and at Balliol College, Oxford, and joined the 4th Battn. Royal Munster Fusiliers (Kerry Militia) 9 Feb. 1894, and served during four trainings. He joined the 2nd Life Guards 5 Jan. 1899. In June, 1899, Lieut. Dyer was seconded for service in Northern Nigeria, where he took part in (1) the Kaduna Expedition, 1900 (Despatches; Medal and clasp); (2) the Bornu Expedition, and operations in the Wurkum Hills and Bassama country, 1902 (wounded; Despatches; Medal and clasp). The London Gazette of 24 April, 1903, contained Sir F. Lugard's Despatches, dated from Mureji, 16 Aug. 1902, with reference to the Expedition to Bornu, and the operations which resulted in the capture of the ex-Emir of Kontagora, as well as other expeditions in Northern Nigeria. The Expedition, under Colonel Morland, started from Ibi (which is three hundred miles up the Benue from Lokoja) at the end of January. After subjugating the Yerguins, a turbulent hill tribe, Colonel Morland was attacked beyond Bautshi on the 16th Feb. by a strong force of some seven hundred dervishes dressed in the "Jibbeh," followers of the Mallam Jibrella, who called himself the Mahdi, and had long been the firebrand of that part of the Protectorate, and hitherto invariably victorious. The enemy was defeated with great loss, and the pursuit resulted in the capture of the Mallam by Lieut. Dyer, who—as Colonel Morland relates—"rode seventy miles in seventeen hours, with ten men only, and was back at Gujba in forty-two hours; a remarkable performance indeed in a roadless country." In the difficult operations which followed the Bassama and the Wurkum and Djen tribes were defeated in several actions, until they sued for peace." Sir F. D. Lugard adds: "I concur in the selection of officers made by Colonel Morland for special mention, viz.: . . . . Lieut. Dyer, an officer who has always been distinguished for intrepidity and dash." For his services in this expedition Lieut. Dyer received the Medal and clasp. He was wounded. (3) He served in the Kano-Sokoto Expedition in 1903; wounded. The "Daily Mail" of 16 Feb. 1903, says: "The following telegram was received late on Friday night by the Colonial Office from the Governor, Sir F. D. Lugard: "Fifty miles from Zaria, 8 Feb. Kano occupied by Colonel Morland, 3 Feb. Lieut. S. B. B. Dyer, 2nd Life Guards, severely wounded, sword-cuts, wrists." Kano was occupied on 3 Feb., after considerable fighting, the enemy defending the walls, which were 15 feet high, and proof against millimetre shell. After a fruitless bombardment of the main gate, the British troops stormed a smaller gate a mile off. Lieut. Dyer (2nd Life Guards) led the storming party with great gallantry, and was twice wounded. The operations were entirely under Colonel Morland, and were brilliantly carried out. He mentioned the splendid work of the Mounted Infantry, under Lieuts. Porter and Wright, and especially commends Major McClintock, Major Cubitt, Lieut. Dyer and Mr. Wallace, the Deputy Commissioner. For his services in this expedition Lieut. Dyer received a clasp; was twice mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Sept. 1903]: "Lieut. (Local Capt.) Stewart Barton Bythesea Dyer, 2nd Life Guards, West African Frontier Force. In recognition of services with the Kano-Sokoto Expedition." (4) He was in command of the Dakakari Expedition, 1904 (Despatches and clasp). A report dated 18 April, 1904, by Capt. R. H. Goodwin, says: "Orderly Room, 1st Battn., Northern Nigeria Regt., West African Frontier Force. I have much pleasure in conveying to you H.E.'s congratulations and appreciation of the manner in which the operations recently performed by you in Dakakari were carried out." H.E. Colonel Sir Frederick Lugard, K.C.M.G., writes: "I should have liked to express my congratulations to Capt. Dyer (1) on the success of his expedition; (2) on its small cost; (3) on the maps and itineraries. A commander who succeeds in all these three points is ideal. The expedition seems to have been carried out in a very gallant, effective, and at the same time humane manner. I am particularly glad to see that my suggestions as to disarmament and as to giving towns sufficient warning to let women and non-combatants escape were given effect to, and also that the troops are remaining for a while in the country." Major Dyer retired in Jan. 1910, and joined the Special Reserve of Officers, the Wiltshire Militia. He was prospective Liberal candidate for Salisbury, 1912. He was Intelligence Officer on the Staff at Weymouth, 1914–15, and was awarded the War Badge, Sept. 1916, for services rendered. He was appointed Military Attaché, British Embassy at Madrid, in the autumn of 1915; but ill-health compelled him to relinquish the appointment for that of Honorary Attaché, having failed to satisfy the Medical Board. He retired from the Reserve of Officers, owing to ill-health, in Jan. 1917, and died 26 Jan. 1917, at his flat near the British Embassy, Madrid. He was buried in the English Cemetery outside the town. The expeditions in West Africa had undermined a naturally fine constitution, and he succumbed to the disease from which he had been suffering for some time, but was able to continue his work at the Embassy up to within a fortnight of his death, continuing to play polo and fence to the last, and showing no apparent sign of ill-health. The inscription on his tomb, "Sans peur et sans reproche," well describes a very gallant officer who maintained throughout his life the tradition of a long line of brave men from whom he sprang. Major Dyer played football for the War Office v. Harrow in 1899; he took a first class for Musketry at Hythe, 1902; won the Thirty Guinea Challenge Cup and the Ten Guinea Silver Cup in the Epée v. Epée Competition during the Royal Military Tournament at Olympia in 1909, and won medals at the Fencing Tournaments (Epée v. Epée) at Ostende and Houlgate in 1909, and also many medals of the Epée Club at Ranelagh and Hurlingham. He was the winner of silver and bronze medals at the International Fencing Tournament at Prague in 1911. When he retired from the 2nd Life Guards he gave a cup to be annually competed for by teams of five non-commissioned officers and men of the regiment for sabre-fencing. He won a medal for pistol shooting at the International Tournament at Ostende in 1909. Major Dyer was also a good rider to hounds, and hunted with the Bicester and Garth Hunts. He gave a fine set of big game heads to the Cavalry Club. He played polo in H.M. the King of Spain's team in Madrid in 1916, where he won the Ladies' Nomination Cup given that season, and was also fond of big game shooting. Capt. Dyer married, on 11 June, 1906, at St. George's Church, Hanover Square, W., Mai, only child of the late Capt. S. L. Osborne, R.N., and their son is Thomas Musgrave Swinnerton Dyer, born 5 July, 1907.

HOOD, THE HONOURABLE HORACE LAMBERT, Capt., Royal Navy, was born at 20, South Street, Mayfair, W., 2 Oct. 1870. He was the second son of Francis Wheeler, Fourth Viscount Hood, and his wife, Edith, daughter of Arthur Wood, Esq., of Calverley Park, Tunbridge Wells. He came of an old Dorset family famous for its seamen and good fighters, being fifth in descent from the illustrious Admiral Sir Samuel Hood (afterwards Viscount Hood), who was second in command to Lord Rodney in his great victory off Domenica in 1782, when he defeated the superior French fleet commanded by the Comte de Grasse. Nelson said of this Lord Hood, who was his sea daddy and precursor, that he was "England's best naval commander." Viscount Bridport, who was this Lord Hood's brother, was second in command to Lord Howe on "the glorious first of June," and blockaded Brest from 1798. Lord Hood, on board the Zealous (a name since adopted for the family motto), first sighted the French fleet in Aboukir Bay, and took part in the Battle of the Nile. Another brother, Capt. Alexander Hood, died in the moment of victory aboard the Mars, in the famous duel with the French ship Hercule. Admiral Horace Hood was thus not the first of his family to be killed in action. Horace Hood was educated at Farnborough School until he entered H.M.S. Britannia. In 1883 he joined the Royal Navy as a Cadet at the age of 13. He served in the Temeraire in 1885, and was a Midshipman in H.M.S. Calliope when the indomitable courage of her commander, Capt. (later Vice-Admiral) Kane, saved that cruiser from destruction in the terrible hurricane in Samoa in March, 1889, when the United States cruisers and other vessels were driven ashore and were lost. In passing his examination for Lieutenant he obtained five first-class certificates with 4,398 marks out of a possible 4,600; this is the highest number of marks ever obtained by an officer at this examination. He was awarded the Beaufort Testimonial, a Goodenough Medal, and the Rider Memorial Prize. He was promoted Lieutenant in 1890, and specialized in gunnery. In 1898 he served with the gunboat flotilla employed during Kitchener's operations on the Nile, and was present at the battles of the Atbara and Omdurman. He was mentioned in Despatches by Sir Herbert Kitchener for his good service, and was promoted Commander. He also received the Egyptian Medal and the Fourth Class of the Turkish Order of the Medjidie. He was promoted Captain, R.N., in 1903, and commanded H.M.S. Hyacinth on the East India Station. He was Flag Captain to Rear-Admiral Atkinson Willes, and landed in command of a naval brigade which stormed and captured on the 21st April, 1904, the stronghold of Illig, in Somaliland, the headquarters of the "Mad Mullah." Capt. Hood's behaviour on that occasion is thus described in a contemporary record: "Capt. Hood, of H.M.S. Hyacinth, greatly distinguished himself in the close fighting which followed the British charge. With sword in one hand and revolver in the other he entered the caves from which the dervishes were firing and accounted for many of them. A Corpl. Flowers followed and despatched a dervish, who was in the act of spearing Capt. Hood from behind." For this exploit Capt. Hood was made a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 6 Sept. 1904]: "The Honourable Horace Lambert Hood, Capt., Royal Navy. In recognition of services during the operations in Somaliland." He received the General South African Medal with clasp for Somaliland (190--4). Capt. Hood was created a Member of the Royal Victorian Order in April, 1904. As Captain of H.M.S. Berwick he formed part of the escort which accompanied His Majesty the King to India. He was Naval Attaché at Washington, U.S.A., from Oct. 1907, to Nov. 1908. From Oct. 1910, to Jan. 1913, Capt. Hood was in command of the Royal Naval College, Osborne. He was created a C.B. on the Coronation of King George, and for a short time before attaining flag rank he was A.D.C. to His Majesty (July, 191- to May, 1913). He was promoted to the rank of Rear-Admiral 17 May, 1913, being only 41 years of age. In June, 1914, he was appointed Naval Secretary to the First Lord of the Admiralty, a post which he held till Oct. 1914, when he took command of the Dover Patrol. For some months he was in charge of this, with the flotilla of monitors and destroyers and other vessels which kept the Straits clear of the enemy, and engaged the flank of the German Army from the sea off the Belgian coast. He earned distinction also in land fighting, and was mentioned for gallant and distinguished service in the field by Field-Marshal Lord French in a Despatch dated 18 Feb. 1915, in connection with the part he took to prevent the Germans reaching the Channel Ports. With the guns from his ship he smashed a large portion of the German transport which was advancing by the coast road, and destroyed the bridging material with which they had hoped to cross the Yser. The delay which thus took place in the execution of the German plan had an important bearing on the ultimate defeat of the enemy. On relinquishing command of the Dover Patrol he took command of the Naval Patrol in Irish waters, and held this appointment until he was transferred to the Grand Fleet in command of the Third Battle Cruiser Squadron, H.M.S. Invincible being his flagship. On 31 May (the eve of the anniversary of Lord Howe's glorious first of June, in which Lord Bridport (a Hood) took such a leading part) was fought the Battle of Jutland. Rear-Admiral Hood was Second-in-Command of the Battle Cruiser Fleet, but having been detached with his 3rd Battle Cruiser Squadron, did not arrive on the scene of action till the afternoon, when he was just ahead of the battleships under Admiral Jellicoe. In the words of Admiral Beatty's Despatch: "Admiral Hood, without an instant's hesitation, and in a manner that excited the highest admiration of all who were privileged to witness it, placed his ships in line ahead of Admiral Beatty's squadron. No admiral ever crowned an all too short career more devotedly or in a manner more worthy of the name he bore." At first the 3rd Battle Cruiser Squadron took up its station in advance of the ships under Sir David Beatty, and at one time the Invincible closed to within short range of the enemy's guns. It was here that the Invincible was sunk by a purely chance explosion, only a quarter of an hour after she had come into action. In that short time, however, the descendant of Nelson's tutor had done deadly work. The leading ship of the enemy's line was shattered by salvoes of the Invincible and driven out of action, in fact, before the Grand Fleet came fully into action the van of the enemy was crumpled up, and his line was so disordered that light cruisers engaged his battleships, and the enemy never afterwards appeared as an organized force. With Admiral Hood perished the whole of his crew except two officers and four men. He was awarded posthumously the K.C.B., by Gazette dated 15 Sept. 1916. Admiral Beatty, writing to a friend, uses these words: "I have no regrets except for the gallant comrades who have gone—who died gloriously. It would have warmed your heart to see the gallant Hood leading his squadron into action." The death of this heroic member of a famous family could scarcely have taken place under more fitting circumstances, so well in keeping with the splendid traditions of his great family.

"Zealous he was in life, fearless in death."

The Hon. H. L. Hood.

On the 19th Jan. 1910, at Burlington, Iowa, U.S.A., he married Ellen, widow of George Nickerson, Esq., of Dedham, Mass., and daughter of A. F. Touzalin, Esq., of Boston, U.S.A. Their sons are: Samuel, born 15 Oct. 1910, and Alexander Lambert, born 11 March, 1914.

KENDALL, CHARLES JAMES COPE, Commander, Royal Indian Marine, was born in 1864, son of the late Surgeon-General H. Kendall, A.M.D., and Annie, daughter of General Sir James Brind, G.C.B. He was educated at Epsom, and entered the Royal Indian Marine in 1885; served in Burma, 1885–89 (Medal with two clasps); with the Marine Survey, India, 1889–97; in China, 1900 (Medal), and in Somaliland, 1904. For his services in the last-mentioned campaign he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 6 Sept. 1904]: "Charles James Cope Kendall, Commander, Royal Indian Marine. In recognition of services during the operations in Somaliland." Capt. Kendall served in the European War. He was appointed Junior Marine Transport Officer at Suez 22 Aug. 1914, and held that post until transferred to Cairo, as Divisional Naval Transport Officer, 11 Feb. 1918, reverting to the Royal Indian Marine 12 June, 1919. He was created a C.I.E. in 1919, and was also given the 3rd Class Order of the Nile. He married, at St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, 26 June, 1901, Lilian Mary (died 1909), youngest daughter of the late Rev. William Maule, of Eyensbury, St. Neots, and has one son, Bryan Harold Maule, born 14 Feb. 1906.

ALLEN, ROBERT FRANKLIN, Major, was born 21 Feb. 1860, son of the late Major R. Austen Allen, M.D., A.M.S. He joined the Royal Engineers 6 April, 1879, as a Lieutenant, and became Captain 1 April, 1889. He served in the expedition to Manipur in 1891, as Field Engineer, Kohima Column, and C.R.E. of the Force (Despatches [London Gazette, 14 Aug. 1891]; Medal with clasp); was promoted Major 19 Dec. 1897; served in East Africa in 1903 and 1904; in operations in Somaliland and the action at Jidballi, serving as C.R.E. from 22 July, 1903. He was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 2 Sept. 1904]; received the Medal with two clasps, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 6 Sept. 1904]: "Robert Franklin Allen, Major, Royal Engineers. He served in the operations in the Transvaal, April to Sept. 1901, and Nov. 1901, to 31 May, 1902; in Orange River Colony, March and May, 1902; also during the operations on the Zululand Frontier of Natal in Sept. and Oct. 1901 (Despatches [London Gazette, 29 July, 1902]; Queen's Medal with four clasps). Capt. Leveson was employed with the Egyptian Army 27 Feb. 1903, to 26 Feb. 1913, and was promoted Major 19 Feb. 1906. He served in the Sudan, 1906; took part in the operations at Talodi in Southern Kordofan (Egyptian Medal with clasp; 4th Class Osmanieh), and again in the Sudan in 1912. For this campaign he received the 3rd Class Medjidie and the Egyptian Medal with clasp; was mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 3 Sept. 1912]: "For services during operations referred to in above Despatch (Sir F. R. Wingate's relative to operations in the South-Eastern Sudan against the Beir and Annak tribes, Jan. to March, 1912): Charles Henry Leveson, Major, 18th (Queen Mary's Own) Hussars, employed with the Egyptian Army." Major Leveson served in the European War in 1914, and was severely wounded. He was subsequently specially employed at the War Office, and was G.S.O.3, 2 and 1, War Office; was given the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army 15 Dec. 1917, and retired from the 18th Hussars 17 Aug. 1918. Lieut.-Colonel Leveson married Annie Marguerite, daughter of the late C. W. Lomer, of Perrott's Brook House, North Cerney, Cirencester, and they have two sons and one daughter.

London Gazette, 4 Aug. 1914.—"The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the appointment of the undermentioned Officer to the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of his services whilst in command of a party of 25 rank and file of the 3rd Battn. King's African Rifles on the occasion of a reconnaissance on 3 Sept. 1913, on the east shore of Lake Rudolph, East African Protectorate."

JONES, WILLIAM LLOYD, Lieut., was born on 13 Jan. 1886, and joined the Middlesex Regt., as a Second Lieutenant, 24 Jan. 1906. He was promoted to Lieutenant 10 Oct. 1908, and was employed with the King's African Rifles from 17 Aug. 1911, to 7 Aug. 1914. He served in the East African Protectorate in 1913, in command of the reconnaissance on the east shore of Lake Rudolph. He was severely wounded, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 4 Aug. 1914]: "In recognition of his services whilst in command of a party of 25 rank and file of the 3rd Battn. King's African Rifles, on the occasion of a reconnaissance on the 3rd Sept. 1913, on the east shore of Lake Rudolph, East African Protectorate. To be a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order, William Lloyd Jones, Lieut., Middlesex Regt. The following Despatch, dated 12 June, 1914, relating to the engagement of the 3rd Sept. last, in which Lieut. W. Lloyd Jones, Middlesex Regt., was severely wounded, has been received in the Colonial Office from the Governor of the East African Protectorate: During a reconnaissance to the north of Loizangalani, on the east shore of Lake Rudolph, in the East African Protectorate, on the 3rd of Sept. 1913, Lieut. W. Lloyd Jones, who, with 25 rank and file of the 3rd Battn. King's African Rifles, was acting as escort to the Political Officer, came into touch with a party of Abyssinians at a water hole named Bwann (30° 17′ N. and 36° 44′ E.). The latter retired behind a dense thorn zariba eight feet high, containing one gate. Lieut. Lloyd Jones, after reconnoitring the zariba, advanced into the open within 25 yards of the enemy, and summoned them through his Abyssinian orderly to come out, at the same time assuring them that they would be granted their lives. The enemy replied that they would not come out, and immediately began to barricade the gate. Seeing this, Lieut. Lloyd Jones, though unaware of the numbers of the enemy, at once ordered his men to charge, and himself ran forward at their head. His Abyssinian orderlies heard those inside shout, 'Shoot the white man!' Almost immediately the bugler, who was just behind Lieut. Lloyd Jones, was hit by a bullet in the chest, and he himself, before he could reach the gate, received a shot in the left ankle which completely shattered the bone and brought him to the ground. The orderlies and a sergeant rushed on, and, breaking through the gate, shot down everyone inside the zariba. Lieut. Lloyd Jones, not knowing whether there were any more of the enemy in the vicinity, then had himself carried up to some high ground overlooking the water, and threw out a screen of scouts on the neighbouring hills. On the return of the Political Officer, who was surveying not far away, Lieut. Lloyd Jones was carried back to Loizangalani, where he arrived on the 7th Sept." Lieut. W. Lloyd Jones was the last officer to win the D.S.O. before the European War. At the outbreak of the European War he was given a special appointment (graded as G.S.O.3), Aug. 1914, to March, 1915. He was promoted Captain 8 Dec. 1914; was specially employed at the War Office 4 Oct. 1915.

London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914.—"War Office, 9 Nov. 1914.—His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to approve of the appointment of the undermentioned Officers to be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of their services with the Expeditionary Force, specified below."

BURNE, ALFRED HIGGINS, Lieut., was born 26 Sept. 1886, fifth son of Colonel Lambrooke Thomas Higgins Burne, V.D., J.P., of Loynton Hall, and Julia Susanna, daughter of the late Valentine Vickers, of Offley Grove, Staffordshire. He was educated at Winchester College, and joined the Army in July, 1906. He served in the European War, 1914–18. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Alfred Higgins Burne, Lieut., J Battery, Royal Horse Artillery. For gallant handling of his section under heavy fire at Gibraltar, France, on the 8th Sept. 1914." This was the first D.S.O. gazetted during the Great War. He was promoted Captain, 30 Oct. 1914, and Major 12 Feb. 1917, and was appointed to Brigade Major, R.A., 32nd Division, British Armies in France, 30 Aug. 1918. Capt. Burne was five times mentioned in Despatches, and was awarded a Bar to his D.S.O. [London Gazette, April, 1918].

a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Algernon Joseph Rutherfurd Lamb, Lieut., 2nd Dragoon Guards (Queen's Bays). As Machine Gun Officer, by his coolness and promptitude the hostile gunfire was got under, and, mainly owing to the fire of his detachment, eight hostile guns were abandoned by the enemy." This was the second D.S.O. gazetted for the Great War. Capt. Lamb writes: "The decoration was awarded for service at the Battle of Nery, which took place near Compèigne during the Retreat from Mons on 1 Sept. 1914. This was the action during which L Battery, Royal Horse Artillery, was destroyed, after a most gallant fight. I was Machine Gun Officer of my regiment. Early on this morning the 1st Cavalry Brigade, who were bivouacking in and around the village of Nery, were attacked by a German Cavalry Division with 12 guns; eight of these had been brought up to within 700 yards of the village under cover of a dense mist. When the mist lifted at about 6 a.m., these guns revealed their presence by opening a heavy fire on L Battery and the horses of my regiment, which were feeding in the lines. I was shaving, and was in full view of the enemy when the mist cleared and the artillery fire began. The ensuing fight has so often been described in books and newspaper articles that it seems unnecessary to repeat it all. I collected all the available machine gunners of my two gun teams, amounting to seven in all (the remainder being in a different part of the village when the action began), and mounted the guns on the edge of a slightly sunk road in face of the German guns, whence I was able to bring a destructive fire to bear on the hostile gun teams. In about two hours or so, the enemy, having attempted repeatedly to withdraw their guns, which they failed to do owing to the missiles that were dropping around the gun positions, retired and abandoned the eight guns. A dismounted attack made by German cavalrymen towards the right of our position through standing crops failed to materialize." He also received the Croix de Chevalier (Légion d'Honneur). He became Captain, 2nd Dragoon Guards, 21 April, 1917, and was employed with the Egyptian Army to command the Sudanese Squadron of Cavalry and Mounted Infantry from 15 April, 1916, and later as D.A.A.G.

HARDINGE, THE HONOURABLE EDWARD CHARLES, Lieut. was born at Constantinople on 3 May, 1892, elder son of Charles, Baron Hardinge of Penshurst, K.G., P.C., G.C.B., G.C.S.I., G.C.M.G., G.C.I.E., G.C.V.O., I.S.O., late Viceroy and Governor-General of India, and of the Honourable Winifred Sturt (who died in 1914), daughter of the 1st Baron Alington. He was a nephew of Colonel Viscount Hardinge, A.D.C., and of Lord Alington; was educated at Wellington College, and while there was a Page of Honour to His late Majesty King Edward VII., and afterwards went to the Royal Military College, Sandhurst. He was gazetted to the 15th Hussars in Sept. 1911, and in Dec. of that year was Honorary A.D.C. to the Viceroy during the Durbar. In Jan. 1912, he joined his regiment in South Africa, and he was promoted to Lieutenant in Aug. 1914. In 1914 he rode remarkably well at the International Horse Show at Olympia, winning full marks in the London to Aldershot ride. He was a Member of the Cavalry Club, a very keen rider to hounds, a good polo player, and he won the Subalterns' Point-to-Point Race at the regimental races in Jan. 1914. He served with his regiment in the European War, and greatly distinguished himself before he died on the 18th Dec. 1914, from several severe wounds in both arms, which he had received on the 27 Aug., near Le Cateau, and the King himself sent a telegram to Lord Hardinge, saying: "I have had great pleasure in conferring the Distinguished Service Order on your son, for ability and gallantry in reconnaissance under great difficulty and machine-gun fire on three successive days, when he was severely wounded. Glad to say he is progressing satisfactorily."

The Hon. E. C. Hardinge.

We quote accounts of two conspicuous acts of great gallantry by Lieut. the Honourable E. C. Hardinge; on the latter occasion he received the wound of which he unhappily died: "On 23 Aug., about 9.30 p.m., Lieut. Hardinge was sent out from Rouveroy on a most difficult and dangerous night reconnaissance towards Binche, to ascertain movements of the Germans, of which information was very urgently needed. He succeeded in reaching the village of Estinne Hud-Mont. Having avoided Uhlan patrols, and having hidden his small patrol in a stone electric machinery building, he climbed the church tower with a sergeant, and waited for dawn to break. Whilst waiting, a Uhlan patrol entered the village, and others came round it. He remained quietly in observation, and they failed to discover him or his patrol. In the early morning he was able to locate German batteries in position south-west of Binche, a brigade of cavalry moving due west from that place, and their infantry massing near a wood south of it. His difficulty was then to get away, being surrounded, but fortunately another patrol, under Lieut. Nicholson, 15th Hussars, seeing his predicament, came to his assistance by firing on the Uhlans, and then, by withdrawing, drew them off and so enabled Lieut. Hardinge to get through with his most valuable information. He was very highly complimented and noted for reward. (2.) On 27 Aug. two troops (Lieut. Hardinge's being one) were sent out at 4 a.m. from Oisy, on rear-guard work, his troop reconnoitring and observing on the right front, and right of the rear-guard position being held. German columns were reported advancing, and about 10.30 a.m. the patrols were driven in by German infantry. The attack gradually developed, and shortly before 1 p.m. became very heavy, and the flanking company of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, near Bergues, was in difficulties. Lieut. Hardinge, with his troop, was sent to their assistance, and came into action on their left, opposite three machine guns, which he located and tried to silence. A fourth then came into action, outflanking him, and, causing some casualties, forced him to retire. Realizing that the position of the Munsters was untenable (who had to hold on to prevent the rest of the battalion being cut off) unless this machine gun was put out of action, he led a few men up again most gallantly to try and capture it. Whilst trying to locate it exactly he had to stand up and use his glasses, and so became exposed to its fire. He was very severely wounded in both arms, one arm being badly shattered. After having it temporarily bound up, he told his men to hold on as long as they could, and to help the Munsters out, and then quite calmly walked back to where his horses were, and was then taken on to the ambulance."

Lord Ernest Hamilton says in "The First Seven Divisions" (pages 70–73): "The story of the rescue of the Munsters, by the 15th Hussars is one of which the latter regiment may well be proud. Two troops only of the 15th Hussars were engaged, and yet the number of honours that fell to them is remarkable. . . . The story of this affair is as follows: It was reported to the General Commanding that the Munster Fusiliers were in trouble, and the 15th Hussars, who were acting as divisional cavalry, were sent back to help. The country in the neighbourhood of Bergues is a difficult one, being traversed by numerous narrow byways cutting in all directions, and the 15th Hussars, not knowing just where the Munster Fusiliers were, separated into troops and beat the country northwards. Just south of Bergues, where the road from that place meets the main road to La Capelle, Mr. Nicholson's troop found 150 of the Munster Fusiliers in great difficulties with some Germans in pursuit not 200 yards distant. He at once dismounted the troop, and sending the horses off for shelter to a farmyard behind, lined the hedges on the side of the main road and opened fire on the Germans. These retired to a farm some 200 yards up the road, from which they presently brought a machine gun to bear on the hedges, and under cover of this they shortly afterwards emerged, driving a herd of cattle before them down the road. The Hussars, however, shot down both cattle and Germans, and sent the survivors scuttling back once more into the farm. In the meanwhile the Hon. E. Hardinge's troop, having heard the firing, arrived on the scene from another direction, and —also dismounting—crept up to a position from which they could command the farmyard, and opened fire on the Germans massed inside, doing tremendous execution at first, as it was a complete surprise. The Germans, however, quickly recovered themselves, and returned the fire with machine guns. Almost at the first discharge Mr. Hardinge fell mortally wounded, and Sergt. Papworth took over command of the troop. Bodies of the enemy were now seen advancing on all sides, and it was obvious that, if the little British force was to escape being surrounded, it was time to move. There is always a disposition on such occasions for very tired men to throw up the sponge and surrender. In the present instance, however, any such inclination was summarily checked by the energy and determination of Mr. Nicholson and Sergt. Papworth, who, taking prompt charge of the situation, brought the whole party—Munsters and all—safely out of the difficulty. They had to put in twenty-eight miles of steady marching before they finally caught up with their division."

For these services, as has been said, he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "The Honourable Edward Charles Hardinge, Lieut., 15th (The King's) Hussars, 1st Divisional Cavalry. For ability and gallantry in reconnaissance under great difficulty and machine-gun fire, on 22–23 and 27 Aug., during which he was severely wounded." The details given in the quotations given above were confirmed by Major Pilkington, of the 15th Hussars, who was Lieut. Hardinge's Squadron leader, and endorsed by Major Courage, Second-in-Command of the Squadron at the time.

VALLENTIN, HENRY EDWARD, Major, was born 5 Jan. 1870, son of the late Sir James Vallentin. He entered the Royal Artillery 15 Feb. 1889 became Lieutenant 15 Feb. 1892; Captain 18 Sept. 1899; was Adjutant, R.A., 1 Jan. 1900, to 31 March, 1903, and was promoted to Major 13 Feb. 1905. He served in the European War from 1914, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Henry Edward Vallentin, Major, 27th Battery, Royal Field Artillery. For bravery and devotion in withdrawing guns by hand under a heavy fire, near Ligny, France, on 26 Aug." He was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel 30 Oct. 1914; was specially employed at the War Office 8 Oct. 1916, to 7 May, 1917; was A.A.G., War Office, from 8 May, 1917.

Henry E. Vallentin.

GOSSELIN, ALWYN BERTRAM ROBERT RAPHAEL, Capt., served in the European War, and for his services in 1914 was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Alwyn Bertram Robert Raphael Gosselin, Capt., 2nd Battn. Grenadier Guards. Although wounded and in considerable pain, commanded his Company for two days in action, against the advice of the Medical Officer and until he could be relieved by another officer." The "Times" of 13 Feb. 1915, says: "Capt. A. B. R. R. Gosselin, D.S.O., of Blakesware, Herts, 2nd Battn. Grenadier Guards, was killed near Béthune on 7 Feb. Born on 17 Feb. 1883, he was the only surviving son of the late Sir Martin Gosselin, of Blakesware, British Minister at Lisbon, and of the Hon. Lady Gosselin, second daughter of the 1st Lord Gerard. He received his first appointment in Oct. 1901, and was promoted Lieutenant in 1905, and Captain in 1910." A solemn Requiem

BECKWITH-SMITH, MERTON, Second Lieut., was born 11 July, 1890, only son of Beckwith Smith, Esq., of Aberarder, Inverness-shire, N.B. He entered the Coldstream Guards 1 Aug. 1912. He served in the European War from 1914; was promoted Lieutenant 18 Dec. 1914; was Adjutant, Coldstream Guards, 15 March to 20 Aug. 1915; Staff Captain 27 Aug. 1915, to 3 July, 1916; became Captain 23 Feb. 1916; was Brigade Major 4 July, 1916, to 26 Aug. 1917; G.S.O.2, 27 Aug. 1917, to 2 April, 1919; he was three times mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Merton Beckwith-Smith, Second Lieut., 1st Battn. Coldstream Guards. On the night of 4 Oct., near Vendresse, with a party of 50 men, he attacked and carried with the bayonet the advanced German trenches, disabling 20 of the enemy, and displayed great enterprise and coolness in this operation, in which he was wounded." Capt. Beckwith Smith was Brigade Major, 2nd Guards Brigade, Forces in Great Britain, 3 April, 1919. He was Adjutant, Coldstream Guards, March to Sept. 1915; was promoted to Captain, and served as Brigade Major, 1st Guards Brigade. He was awarded the Military Cross, and also received the Croix de Guerre. On 14 March, 1918, at St. Margaret's, Westminster, Capt. Beckwith-Smith married Honor, only daughter of Mr. John Blundell Leigh, of Stratton Audley, Bicester. Princess Marie Louise was present at the wedding.

MARTIN, CYRIL GORDON, Lieut., served in the European War, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Cyril Gordon Martin, Lieut., 56th Company, Royal Engineers. At Le Cateau, on the 26th Aug., he held, with his section, a post from which infantry had been driven, and remained there under a very heavy fire until the infantry relieved him." His was one of the first decorations to be gazetted in the Great War, and he subsequently was awarded the Victoria Cross. (See Victoria Cross Volume.)

HEWITT, THE HONOURABLE ARCHIBALD RODNEY, Capt., was born 25 May, 1883, at Torquay, Devon, son of Viscount and Viscountess Lifford, of Court, Crondall, Hants. He was educated at Eastman's; Bonn; Dulwich and Sandhurst, and was commissioned in the 1st Battn. East Surreys 22 Oct. 1902, and became Lieutenant 18 June, 1904, and Captain 17 May, 1910. He was Acting Adjutant to the 1st Battn. East Surreys in India, and Adjutant to the 2nd Battn. in Dublin in 1914. He served in the European War, and was twice mentioned in Despatches from France; was severely wounded at the Marne River Battle on the 9th Sept. 1914, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "The Honourable Archibald Rodney Hewitt, Capt., 1st Battn., The East Surrey Regt. For moving out of the trenches at Le Cateau, under heavy shell fire, and bringing back men who were dribbling to the rear." His D.S.O. was one of the first to be gazetted during the present war. Recovering from his wounds, he was appointed to the 3rd Battn. East Surrey Regt. 23 Feb. 1915, and was killed at the Second Battle of Ypres 25 April, 1915, while gallantly leading his company.

The Hon. A. R. Hewitt.

The following are extracts of letters referring to the late Capt. The Hon. A. R. Hewitt, D.S.O., East Surrey Regiment:

Letter from Colonel, 2nd Battn. East Surreys, dated 10 May, 1915: "He was one that could ill be spared; his influence was all for good, and his cheery and kindly disposition were invaluable on Service, as they were appreciated by all of us in peace time. His regiment has indeed suffered a severe loss. I know what they thought of him."

Letter from Colonel of 2nd Battn. East Surreys, dated 2 May, 1915: "Like everyone who knew him, I liked that dear good fellow from the first day I met him, and the liking grew stronger yearly, and was accompanied by a very high opinion of his character. He had done most gallant service all through the war, and showed the highest promise. It is very sad so valuable a life should be cut short."

Letter from Colonel, 1st Battn. East Surreys, dated 30 April, 1915: "Your son joined under my command in Dublin, and has ever been one of our best friends in the regiment, and until the day before his death was commanding my battalion; the Major under whom he was early last month was loud in his praises of his zeal and dependability. I can honestly assure you the regiment's loss is very, very great. Ever bright and cheery, even under the most adverse circumstances, he was an asset of the greatest value when troops were called upon to do their best."

John Curteis Burnett.

Letter of the Major he was under in March, 1915, dated 28 April, 1915: "For your dear son I am not sorry; he lived like a man, and died like a man, the death we all hope for. He was the most gallant and faithful soul I ever knew."

BURNETT, JOHN CURTEIS, Capt., was born 5 March, 1882, son of the late Capt. Lindsay Robert Burnett, late of the Sherwood Foresters, and Agnes Henrietta Burnett, daughter of the late Rev. S. Curteis, of Sevenoaks, Kent. He joined the Army, as a Second Lieutenant, Unattached, 8 Jan. 1901, and joined the 2nd Battn. The Duke of Wellington's West Riding Regt. in April, 1901. He became Lieutenant 6 April, 1904; was Adjutant, Territorial Force, 15 Aug. 1908, to 31 Oct. 1911; was promoted Captain 23 Dec. 1909. He served in the European War from 1914, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "John Curteis Burnett, Capt., 2nd Battn. The Duke of Wellington's (West Riding) Regt. He trained and commanded the 5th Divisional Cyclist Company, on the remarkable efficiency, disregard of risk in reconnaissance and vigilance of which the security of the 5th Division has often entirely depended." His decoration was gazetted in the first list published for the European War. He was wounded 11 Nov. 1914. He was Temporary Major, Army Cyclist Corps, 17 May, 1915, to 7 June, 1916, and became Major, West Riding Regt. 8 Jan. 1916, and Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel from Jan. 1917. He married, in Oct. 1908, Mary Isabelle, daughter of John Haddon, Esq., J.P., of Gloucestershire.

KAY, SIR WILLIAM ALGERNON IRELAND, BART., Major, was born 21 March, 1876, son of Lt.-Col. William Algernon Kay, 5th Bart. (U.K., 1803), 68th Regt. (retired), and Emily, daughter of the late Thomas James Ireland, of Ousden Hall, Suffolk. He was educated at Harrow (The Knoll), and joined the Army in 1896. He served in Sierra Leone, 1898–99 (Medal with clasp). He served in the South African War, 1899–1902 (Despatches; Queen's Medal with four clasps, and King's Medal with two clasps). He became Captain, 1901; was Adjutant, Volunteers, 1906–8, and Territorials, 1908–9. He succeeded his father in 1914, as 6th Baronet. He became Major, 1914, and served in the European War. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "William Algernon Kay, Major, 2nd Battn. The King's Royal Rifle Corps. He made a personal reconnaissance of great value on 1 Oct., reaching a point within 100 yards of the enemy's outposts." This was one of the first D.S.O.'s gazetted during the European War. He was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel, and was promoted to Lieutenant-Colonel, 1915, and mentioned in Sir Douglas Haig's Despatch dated War Office, 15 June, 1916, and on five other occasions, and created a C.M.G. Brigadier-General Sir William Kay was killed in action 4 Oct. 1918.

William Algernon Kay.

BOSCAWEN, THE HONOURABLE GEORGE EDWARD, Lieut., was born 6 Dec. 1888, second son of the 7th Viscount Falmouth and Kathleen, daughter of the 2nd Lord Penrhyn. He entered the Army in Dec. 1907. He served in the European War from 1914; became Captain 30 Oct. 1914; was mentioned in Despatches, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "The Honourable George Edward Boscawen, Lieut., Royal Field Artillery. For gallantly fighting his section of guns in front of La Bassée on 13 Oct., when all his detachment except himself were wounded, and all infantry had fallen back from where the guns were." The award of his D.S.O. was published in the first list gazetted for the European War. He became Captain 30 Oct. 1914, and was given the Brevet of Major. He died of wounds 27 May, 1918.

The Hon. G. E. Boscawen.

HOWARD, GUY ROBERT, Lieut., was born 5 Feb. 1886, son of Colonel W. Howard. He joined the Essex Regt., and retired, entering the Special Reserve. He served in the European War; was wounded, mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Guy Robert Howard, Lieut., The Essex Regt. (Special Reserve). While in command of a patrol of the 2nd Battn. Essex Regt. on the 24th of Sept., to the south of Vregny, made a valuable reconnaissance through a thick wood, reaching a point 150 yards from the enemy's trenches." He joined the Royal Flying Corps, and became Temporary Major.

ARIS, CHARLES JOHN, Second Lieut., was born 1 Feb. 1874, son of John Aris, of Branksome, College Road, Norwich. He was commissioned in the 16th Lancers 1 Oct. 1914, and for his services in the European War was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Charles John Aris, Second Lieut., 16th (The Queen's) Lancers. For gallantry and determination when on patrol at Katsberg on the 12th of Oct., in charging and driving off a German patrol, and although twice wounded, persisted in sending in his report to his Squadron leader." His decoration was one of the first to be gazetted for the European War. He was A.D.C., 5th Aug. 1914, to 4 Jan. 1915, and Staff Captain from 5 Jan. 1915.

STANLEY-CREEK, ROBERT FORBES, Capt., was born at Cheltenham 8 Feb. 1878, son of Colonel Edward Stanley-Creek, late Royal Welsh Fusiliers. He was educated at Marlborough (92–93 B.2), and joined the Royal West Surrey Regt. 4 Jan. 1899, from the Militia. He became Lieutenant, 1 Aug. 1900, and Captain 2 Aug. 1910. He served in the European War from 1914; present at Gheluvelt, Pilkem Inn and Battle of the Aisne; was mentioned in Despatches and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Robert Forbes Stanley-Creek, Capt., 1st Battn. The Queen's (Royal West Surrey Regt.). For conspicuous gallantry and able leading in the attack on the Inn on the 23rd of Oct. This attack, made in conjunction with the 2nd Infantry Brigade, was so successful that many German prisoners were taken, and 70 of our men previously captured were released." Mrs. Stanley-Creek writes: "About the Battle of Pilkem Inn on 23 Oct., for which he got his D.S.O., my husband wrote to me: 'We had a great day on the 23rd. My company was in the firing line and captured a small village held by the Germans. We took about 40 prisoners and released 60 Cameron Highlanders who had been captured. After that I had to advance to a trench, which we held until dusk. After dark the Germans crept round our flank, and got right behind us, and I managed to lead the remainder of my company round to the left and to rejoin headquarters. We had about 60 casualties during the night. We were fighting from early morning, and did not get back until about 2 the next morning.' I am afraid my husband did not hear about his D.S.O. before his stand at the 31st Oct. (Battle of Gheluvelt), when only 40 men and two officers of his regiment got away. . . . He has been reported missing since 31 Oct. 1914, and so I am writing for him." (20th March, 1917): "I think about the clearest information I have about the battle is from a man, Jaggers, in the regiment who was wounded and taken prisoner on that day, and later on escaped and got back to England. He said my husband would not surrender (I suppose he hoped for reinforcements), but went on firing his revolver when the German officer called on him to give up his sword, until two or three German soldiers crept up behind him and beat him on the head with their rifle-butts. As to sporting achievements, he was very fond of riding, and I quote from his father's letter: 'His good riding to hounds and between flags, Polo-team from the day he joined the Queen's. Third best average of winning mounts his last year in India.' He was the bravest man and the best of husbands, and I hope he may yet turn up again, although things look black." Mrs. Stanley-Creek wrote 29 April, 1917: "My husband was wounded on the 14th Sept. 1914, at the Battle of the Aisne, but never left the regiment; in fact, had to take command of it for eight hours, everyone else being killed or wounded, until (then Capt.) Watson (now Major, I believe) came back to the regiment from the Staff to take the command." Capt. Stanley-Creek married, 26 Nov. 1908, at Camberley, Surrey, Marie T. Stanley-Creek, daughter of the late Sir David Masson, Bart., and Lady Masson, of Lahore, India, and they had a daughter, Braida Stanley-Creek.

Robert F. Stanley-Creek.

RISING, ROBERT EDWARD, Capt., was born 23 May, 1871, son of Thomas Alfred and Kate Rising, of The Manor House, Ormesby, Norfolk. He was educated at Charterhouse, where he was in the Football XV. and in the Cadet Corps, and at Trinity College, Cambridge. He passed into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, sixth on the list, and passed out twelfth with Honours. In Nov. 1892, he was gazetted to the 1st Battn. The Gloucestershire Regt. In 1898 he obtained the "extra" certificate in Musketry. He became Captain, Feb. 1900, and served in the South African War of 1899–1900, being present at the Relief of Kimberley and at the operations in the Orange Free State, including actions at Paardeberg, Poplar Grove and Dreifontein, and also in Natal (Queen's Medal and four clasps. In Nov. 1902, he passed the examination for promotion, attaining the higher standard of proficiency, carrying a special certificate. In April, 1906, he passed the Signalling Course, also with a special certificate. Capt. Rising served in the European War, from 1914, and for gallant conduct at the defence of Langemarck on the 23rd of Oct. 1914, was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914]: "Robert Edward Rising, Capt., 1st Battn. The Gloucester Regt. Went up with supports and conspicuously controlled the defence of the battalion's trenches against a determined attack by the enemy. But for this stout defence the line must have been penetrated." His D.S.O. was one of the first to be gazetted during the European War. He became Major, Nov. 1914, and the promotion was not gazetted until after his death. Major Rising died of wounds received in action at the first Battle of Ypres 7 Nov. 1914. He was mentioned in Sir John French's Despatch of the 14 Jan. 1915. In 1896 he married Amy Worship, who died the following year; and in 1901 he married Constance Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Colonel R. W. Edis, C.B., of The Old Hall, Ormesby, Norfolk, and they had two children: Robert Edis, born in Aug. 1905, and Elsie Mary Elizabeth, born in July, 1909.

Robert Edward Rising.

REES, HUBERT CONWAY, Capt., was born 26 March, 1882, at Conway, North Wales, son of the Rev. Canon Henry Rees, M.A., Hon. Canon and Precentor, Bangor Cathedral, and formerly Vicar of Conway, North Wales. He was educated at Charterhouse; was commissioned in the 3rd (Militia) Battn. East Surrey Regt. in Dec. 1900, and served in the South African War, 1901–2, taking part in the operations in Cape Colony and Orange River Colony in July, 1901; also in Cape Colony, July, 1901, to 31 May, 1902, receiving the Queen's Medal with clasp. He was gazetted to the Welsh Regt., as Second Lieutenant, 28 Jan. 1903; became Lieutenant 9 Sept. 1906, and Captain 12 June, 1912. Capt. Rees served in the European War with the 2nd Battn. The Welsh Regt.; landed in France 12 Aug. 1914, and took part in the following actions: the Retreat, Marne, Aisne, Langemarck, First Battle of Ypres, Festubert (21 Dec. 1914), Givenchy (25 Jan. 1915) and the Somme. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 9 Nov. 1914], this being one of the first D.S.O.'s awarded for the European War: "Hubert Conway Rees, Capt., The Welsh Regt. In the course of the action on 21 Oct., by his particularly skilful reconnaissances and by gallant leading, successfully supported the advanced line with a company under a heavy fire, relieving the pressure on the South Wales Borderers." He commanded the 2nd Battn. Welsh Regt. during the latter half of the First Battle of Ypres (Givenchy). He was mentioned in Despatches 17 Feb. 1915; was given the Brevet of Major 18 Feb. 1915; was Officer, Company of Gentleman Cadets, Royal Military College, 15 March to 20 April, 1915; G.S.O.2, 43rd (afterwards 38th) Division, New Armies, British Armies in France, 1 July to 7 Dec. 1916; commanded the 94th Infantry Brigade, which attacked Serre 1 July, 1916 (15 to 30 June, 1916); commanded the 11th Infantry Brigade (1 July to 7 Dec. 1916), in succession to Brigadier-General Prowse (who had been killed in action). He took part in actions in front of Le Transloy in Oct. 1916; commanded the 13th Reserve Brigade, Home Forces, 8 Dec. 1916, to 7 March, 1917; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1917; commanded the 149th Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, 8 March to 16 Sept. 1917, and the 150th Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, 27 Feb. to 27 July, 1918. During the Great War he was five times mentioned in Despatches, and he was created a C.M.G. in 1918. He married, 20 Nov. 1914, at St. Andrew's by the Wardrobe, London, Katharine Adelaide Loring, daughter of John Loring, Esq., and they have a daughter, Mary Katharine, born 26 April, 1916.

Hubert Conway Rees.

The London Gazette of the 20th Oct. 1914, and the London Gazette of the 23rd Oct. 1914, contain naval Despatches, from which extracts are given below in the biographies of the officers awarded the Distinguished Service Order in recognition of services described in the Despatches.

London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914.—"Admiralty, 21 Oct. 1914. The King has been graciously pleased to give orders for the following appointments to the Distinguished Service Order . . . in respect of the undermentioned Officers in recognition of their services mentioned in the foregoing Despatches."

BLUNT, WILLIAM FREDERICK, Capt., was born 3 March, 1870, third son of F. W. Blunt, of Culcheth Hall, Teddington. He entered the Royal Navy; was Midshipman of H.M.S. Garnet during the blockade of the Zanzibar Coast, 1888–89. He was Lieutenant in command of H.M.S. Dragon during the operations at Crete in 1897–98; Lieutenant in Command of H.M.S. Esk in China, 1900–1 (Medal). He was in command of H.M.S. Fearless at the action in Heligoland Bight 28 Aug. 1914. Capt. Blunt was mentioned in Rear-Admiral A. H. Christian's Despatches, dated 28 Sept. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "Commodore Reginald Y. Tyrwhitt was in charge of the Destroyer Flotillas, and his report is enclosed herewith. His attack was delivered with great skill and gallantry, and he was most ably seconded by Capt. William F. Blunt, in the Fearless, and the officers in command of the Destroyers, who handled their vessels in a manner worthy of the best traditions of the British Navy." Commodore Reginald Tyrwhitt said in his Despatch dated 26 Sept. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty 21 Oct.), 1914]: "I beg again to call attention to the services rendered by Capt. W. F. Blunt, of H.M.S. Fearless, and the Commanding Officers of the 1st and 3rd Flotillas, whose gallant attacks on the German Cruisers at critical moments undoubtedly saved the Arethusa from more severe punishment and possible capture." In recognition of his services on this occasion, Capt. Blunt was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "William Frederick Blunt, Capt., Royal Navy." Capt. Blunt took part in the Cuxhaven Raid, Christmas Day, 1914. He was Captain of H.M.S. Gloucester at the Battle of Jutland 31 May, 1916, and was mentioned in Despatches 15 Sept. 1916, and specially commended for his services on that occasion. A newspaper paragraph, entitled "The Glory of the Gloucester," says: "Arrangements have been made for the white ensign flown by His Majesty's Ship Gloucester in the Jutland Battle to be deposited in Gloucester Cathedral on 17 Oct. Capt. Blunt, D.S.O., who was in command of the cruiser, in a letter to the Mayor of Gloucester, says: 'It may interest the citizens of Gloucester to know that, though their namesship was fortunate enough to escape both injuries and casualties, she was able to give a very good account of herself, and provided the finishing touches which sank a German light cruiser of the Elbing class. The bearing and conduct of officers and men were all that could be desired. I have the greatest pleasure in thus testifying to the citizens of Gloucester that nothing but the utmost credit is due to the ship named after their illustrious city.'" He became Captain in command of H.M.S. Berwick, and late of H.M.S. Archilles. He married, in 1896, Laura, only daughter of the late Major-General Henry Way Mawbey, R.F.A., and they have two sons.

MEADE, THE HONOURABLE HERBERT, Commander, R.N., was born 3 Nov. 1875, son of the 4th Earl of Clanwilliam and Elizabeth, daughter of Sir A. E. Kennedy, G.C.M.G., Governor of Queensland; and brother of the 5th Earl of Clanwilliam. He served in the European War, from 1914; was present at the engagement off Heligoland, Friday, 28 Aug. 1914. He was mentioned in Commodore Tyrwhitt's Despatch, dated 26 Sept. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty 21 Oct.), 1914]: "H.M.S. Goshawk, Commander the Honourable Herbert Meade, who took his division into action with great coolness and nerve, and was instrumental in sinking the German Destroyer V.187, with the boats of his division saved the survivors in a most chivalrous manner." In recognition of the services recorded above he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "The Honourable Herbert Meade, Commander, Royal Navy." He became Captain in 1915; was present in the action off the Dogger Bank in 1915, and in the Battle of Jutland, 1916, and was mentioned in Despatches [London Gazette, 15 Sept. 1916]. He was later employed on Naval Mobilization. He married, in 1911, Margaret Glyn, daughter of the Right Rev. The Honourable E. C. Glyn, Bishop of Peterborough, and Lady Mary Emma Campbell, daughter of the 8th Duke of Argyll, and they have one son and two daughters.

ROSE, FRANK FORRESTER, Commander, Royal Navy, was born in 1878, youngest son of the late William Rose. He was educated at Stubbington House, Fareham; entered the Royal Navy in 1892, and became Lieutenant in 1901. He was promoted to be Commander in 1913, and served in the European War from 1914. He commanded H.M.S. Laurel in the action off Heligoland 28 Aug. 1914; was wounded, and mentioned in Commodore R. Y. Tyrwhitt's Despatch, dated 26 Sept. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "H.M.S. Laurel, Commander Frank F. Rose, who most ably commanded his vessel throughout the early part of the action, and after having been wounded in both legs, remained on the bridge until 6 p.m., displaying great devotion to duty." For his services on this occasion he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914:] "Frank Forrester Rose, Commander, Royal Navy." He was promoted to Captain in 1918. He married in 1911, Breda Edith, only daughter of Walter Alwynne Gordon, and they have one son.

SAMSON, CHARLES RUMNEY, Commander, Royal Navy, was born at Crumpsall, Lancashire, 8 July, 1883, second son of Charles Leopold Samson, of Grundy, Kershaw, Samson & Co., Solicitors, and N. A. Samson (deceased).

Charles Rumney Samson.

He was educated at Lockers Park, Hemel Hempstead; at The Limes, Greenwich, and in the Britannia, and entered the Royal Navy in July, 1883. He served in Pomone, Somaliland, 1903–4 (Medal and clasp); became Lieutenant in 1904; was First Lieutenant, Philomel, during the operations in the Persian Gulf, 1909–10 (Medal and clasp); took his certificate as Air Pilot in 1911, and carried out the first seaplane experiments and the first cross-country night flights; made the first ascent from the deck of a man-of-war while steaming, 1912. He served in the European War from 1914, in France and Flanders, 1914–15; in the Dardanelles (during the whole of the operations); in Egypt, Palestine and the Red Sea. He was present at the Siege of Antwerp; the First Battle of Ypres; commanded a Brigade of French Territorials, etc., at the Battle of Orchies; received a letter of thanks from the French General, and was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour and given the Croix de Guerre. He was promoted Commander, and was mentioned in a memorandum by the Director of the Air Department, Admiralty, dated 11 Oct. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: "Commander Charles R. Samson, R.N., was in command of the Aeroplane and Armoured Motor Support of the Royal Naval Air Service, between the dates of 1 Sept. to 5 Oct. During this period several notable air reconnaissances were made, and skirmishes took place. Of these particular mention may be made of the aeroplane attack on the 4th Sept. on four enemy cars and 40 men, on which occasion several bombs were dropped, and of the successful skirmishes at Cassel on 4 Sept.; Savy on 12 Sept.; Aniehe on 22 Sept.; Orchies on 23 Sept." For these services he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: 'Charles Rumney Samson, Commander, Royal Navy." Commander Samson was mentioned in Despatches six times, and awarded a Bar to his D.S.O. [London Gazette, 23 Jan. 1917]: "Charles Rumney Samson, Commander, Royal Navy. For continual gallantry and service as an aeroplane pilot." He commanded the Ben-my-Chree on the Syrian Coast: "H.M. Seaplane Carrier Ben-my-Chree (Wing-Commander C. R. Samson, D.S.O.) was sunk by gun-fire in Kastelorizo Harbour (Asia Minor) on 11 Jan. 1916. The only casualties were one officer and four men wounded. The Ben-my-Chree, which before the war was well-known to holiday-makers who visited the Isle of Man, was a vessel of 2,550 tons. She was built at Barrow by Messrs. Vickers in 1908, and formerly belonged to the Isle of Man Steam Packet Company." He was promoted to Wing-Captain, R.N.A.S., in Jan. 1918; Lieutenant-Colonel and Temporary Colonel, R.A.F., in command of a group, 1 April, 1918; created a C.M.G. in 1918. He is a Chevalier, Legion of Honour, and was given the Croix de Guerre (with Palm) for cutting through the Germans surrounding Douai and making a passage for the French troops surrounded in that town. In 1907 Commander Samson won the Middle Weight Officers' Boxing Championship, Royal Navy and Marines. Commander Samson married in Ceylon, 7 April, 1917, Honor Oakdene Patrickson, only daughter of Herbert L. Storey, of Ballrigg, Lancashire, and they have a daughter, Margaret Diana Rumney Samson.

HORTON, MAX KENNEDY, Commander, is the son of R. J. Horton, of Minster, Thanet. He joined the Royal Navy, and in 1911 was awarded the Silver Medal for saving life on the occasion of the loss of the Delhi, off Cape Spartel. He served in the European War from 1914 to 1918, and was mentioned in a Despatch (dated 17 Oct. 1914) of Commodore Roger J. B. Keyes, C.B., M.V.O., for his services in the action of Heligoland on Friday, 28 Aug. 1914: "On the 13th Sept. E9 (Lieut.-Commander Max K. Horton) torpedoed and sank the German light cruiser Hela six miles south of Heligoland. A number of destroyers were evidently called to the scene after E9 had delivered her attack, and three hunted her for several hours. On the 14th Sept., in accordance with his orders, Lieut.-Commander Horton examined the outer anchorage of Heligoland, a service attended by considerable risk. . . . On the 6th Oct., E9 (Lieut.-Commander Max K. Horton), when patrolling off the Ems, torpedoed and sank the enemy's destroyer S126. The enemy's torpedo craft pursued tactics, which, in connection with their shallow draft, make them exceedingly difficult to attack with torpedo, and Lieut.-Commander Horton's success was the result of much patient and skilful zeal. He is a most enterprising submarine officer, and I beg to submit his name for favourable consideration." Commander Horton was—for those services—created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "Max Kennedy Horton, Commander, Royal Navy." At the same time he was noted for early promotion. He was promoted to Commander 31 Dec. 1914. In July, 1916, Commander Horton sank the German battleship Pommern in the Baltic. He has sunk two other destroyers, besides two transports and several merchant ships, and was made a Chevalier of the Legion of Honour and given the 4th Class Order of St. Vladimir with Swords, and the 2nd Class Order of St. Anne with Swords and Diamonds. He was awarded a Bar to the Distinguished Service Order.

"Deeds that Thrill the Empire" (pages 401–408) says: "As the pioneer of our submarine successes in the great war, the name of Lieut.-Commander Max Kennedy Horton will always be remembered with honour. This young officer had had a good deal of experience in the submarine service before the war broke out, and, in command of E9, he was present at the Battle of the Heligoland Bight on 28 Aug. 1914, though on that occasion none of our submarines was able to get in a blow at an enemy ship. He was also favourably mentioned in Despatches for having, on 14 Sept. 1914, 'examined the outer anchorage of Heligoland, a service attended by considerable risk;' but he is best remembered by the ships he has sunk. Since the earliest hours of the war British submarines have maintained a close and unceasing watch off the German coast. Owing to the great extent of the mine-fields laid by the enemy and the precautions taken whenever their ships put to sea, the number of victims that have fallen to them is necessarily small—and Horton's distinction is thereby the greater. The Germans considered it a great feat for one of their submarines to sink a British merchantman, though more than twenty thousand such vessels are to be found ploughing the seven seas. How much greater, therefore, must be the honour due to a British submarine which managed to find a German warship at sea and sink it, seeing that the sea was the last place a German warship thought of visiting? On the morning of Sunday, 13 Sept. 1914, two of our submarines, of which E9 was one, were stealthily cruising about in the neighbourhood of Heligoland. That was their station; and they were there not so much for the purpose of sinking ships—the opportunities for doing so were likely to be so rare—but rather to gather what information they could regarding what was going on in the naval fastnesses of the enemy. When, therefore, a small German cruiser was seen approaching from the direction of Wilhelmshaven there was a good deal of excitement on board the submarines—it was so unusual, even within a few miles of the German coast, to see a German warship. To decide to attack the ship was the work of a moment. She was, in fact, the light cruiser Hela—a two-thousand-ton vessel that had seen better days, for she was launched in 1895; but only a few years before the war began she had been practically rebuilt, and was attached to the High Sea Fleet as a despatch vessel. With their periscopes a few feet above the water our submarines warily watched the enemy's approach. As she came nearer, they dived altogether, and then, after a brief interval, the E9 poked her periscope gingerly above the surface again and looked about her. There was the Hela, within easy range, and no sign that the presence of a submarine was suspected. Doubtless the people on board the cruiser would have jeered at anyone who might have suggested the possibility of a British submarine prowling around within six miles of Heligoland. Precisely at half-past six on that Sunday morning there came the disillusionment. With his eye glued to the mirror of the periscope, Horton watched the cruiser closely for a minute or two while he took his bearings. Then, in quick succession, came the orders to dive and to release the two bow torpedoes. One can almost—but not quite—imagine the scene on board the submarine at such a moment. Every man is at his station, for the safety of the ship depends upon each one watching over the section of the complicated machinery that is allotted to him. Nevertheless, every man, calm enough at his own job, must be on the tiptoe of excitement as he waits for the muffled report that shall tell him the torpedo has struck home—or for the continued silence that tells of a miss. In the E9 the men waited just thirty-five seconds. Then there came to them the subdued boom, followed by a slight disturbance of the water, which told them of success. One torpedo at least had got home. To have come to the surface at once would have been to court disaster, for unless the cruiser was mortally injured her men would be at their action stations with all the guns ready to open fire at once. So the E9 waited in patience for fifteen minutes, and when she came to surface it was plain enough that the Hela was doomed. She had a heavy list to starboard, and a number of vessels had already arrived to take off her crew and hunt for her assailant. Therefore the submarine promptly dived again, and when, after another short interval, she rose to the surface a second time, the Hela had disappeared. Round about, however, were a large number of destroyers sent out from Heligoland, armed with the most cunning devices for snaring and destroying submarines; but the E9 eluded them for many hours, and ultimately arrived safely at Harwich. Less than a month later—on 6 Oct.—Horton and the E9 scored their second success. This time the submarine was operating almost in the mouth of the River Ems, outside the important naval and mercantile port of Emden, and evidently her presence had become known, for a flotilla of destroyers, equipped for a regular submarine hunt, came steaming down the river. These hunts are usually a serious business for the submarine, as the German Navy has good cause to know; but thanks to luck and the capable handling of her skipper, the E9 suffered no harm, though it was an extremely anxious time for all on board. Down on the bed of the sea she waited, listening to the noise of the destroyers' engines and the rattling of their snaring implements, never knowing when she might be canted up on end or blown to eternity. Presently the almost intolerable strain passed, and cautiously Horton began to edge his boat towards the surface. The periscope nosed into the air, and, swinging it round to scan the waters, Commander Horton espied two destroyers within six hundred yards of him. One was moving fairly fast, the other was proceeding dead slow. A short word of command, and the submarine was heading bows on to the laggard. Another, and the deadly torpedo was on its way. The submarine dived, but there was no mistake about the explosion. The torpedo struck the destroyer square amidships. She was broken clean in two, and when the submarine came up again to see what had happened nothing was visible of her but the forward end of her bows pointing vertically into the air. The E9's second victim was the destroyer S126, a vessel of 413 tons, launched in 1903, and carrying a crew of about eighty officers and men—of whom very few were saved. For these services and for sinking S126 he was given the Distinguished Service Order, and was noted for early promotion—he was, in fact, made a Commander on 31 Dec. 1914. These two successes, however, seem small in comparison with another which he achieved in the summer of 1915. He was one of the first British submarine officers to take his boat into the Baltic to help our Russian Allies against the heavy naval odds which confronted them; and, as might have been expected from such an officer, he was by no means the least successful. The Germans, from their vast superiority over the Russians at sea, imagined themselves to be undisputed masters of the Baltic; but on 2 July, 1915, when a small German fleet was cruising off the Gulf of Danzig, Commander Horton happened to be on the spot, with the result that the Germans lost one of their best pre-Dreadnought battleships. The whole of the operations in the Baltic were under the direction of the Russian Admiralty, whose reports regarding the work of our submarines in those waters have been exceedingly meagre; but although details are lacking, it is at least known that on the date mentioned Commander Horton torpedoed and sank a German battleship of the Pommern class. The battleship was a vessel of 13,040 tons, launched in 1905, and built at a cost of £1,214,000, and carrying a crew of 736 officers and men. Commander Horton received a high honour from the Emperor of Russia for this great feat, but the strictest secrecy was preserved as to the manner in which it was accomplished."

WILLIAMS-FREEMAN, FREDERICK ARTHUR PEERE, Lieut., joined the Royal Navy. He served in the European War from 1914; was in Submarine E6 during the action in the Heligoland Bight, on Friday, 28 Aug. 1914, and, having fouled a mine, he managed to clear it without exploding it. "After half an hour's patient work this was effected by Lieut. Frederick A. P. Williams-Freeman and Able Seaman Ernest Randall Cremer, Official Number 21425, and the released mine descended to its original depth." (Despatch, dated 17 Oct. 1914, of Commodore Roger J. B. Keyes, C.B., M.V.O. [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]). He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: "Frederick Arthur Peere Williams-Freeman, Lieut., Royal Navy. In recognition of services mentioned in the foregoing Despatches."

GREY, MANDER SPENCER DOUGLAS ADAIR, Squadron Commander, was born 10 Feb. 1889, son of the late Douglas Grey. He joined the Royal Navy, and served in the European War from 1914–18; was mentioned in a Memorandum by the Director of the Air Department, Admiralty, dated 11 Oct. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.) 1914]: "Squadron Commander Spencer Grey, whilst in charge of a flight of naval aeroplanes at Antwerp, penetrated as far as Cologne on the 8th Oct. He circled the city under fire at 600 feet, and discharged his bombs on the military railway station. Considerable damage was done." In recognition of this exploit he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: "Spencer Douglas Adair Grey, Squadron Commander, Royal Naval Air Service." He was promoted to Wing Commander. Wing Commander S. D. A. Grey married, in 1915, Dorothy, daughter of the late Lionel Ashton Dering, and they have a daughter.

MARIX, REGINALD LENNOX GEORGE, Flight Lieut., R.N., was born 17 Aug. 1889, the son of James Marix and Amy Marix. He was educated at Radley College. He entered the R.N.V.R. in 1909, and was appointed to H.M.S. Actaeon 1 Nov. 1912, as Sub-Lieutenant for aviation duties, since when he served continuously in the Naval Wing of the Royal Flying Corps, being appointed Flight Lieutenant, R.N., 1 July, 1914. He served in the European War, joining the Naval Aeroplane Squadron at Antwerp in Sept. 1914; took part in the first two air raids into Germany, and was mentioned in a Memorandum by the Director of the Air Department, Admiralty, dated 11 Oct. 1914 [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: "Flight-Lieut. Marix, acting under the orders of Squadron Commander Spencer Grey, carried out a successful attack on the Düsseldorf airship shed during the afternoon of the 8th Oct. From a height of 600 feet he dropped two bombs on the shed, and flames 500 feet high were seen within 30 seconds. The roof of the shed was also observed to collapse. Lieut. Marix's machine was under heavy fire from rifles and mitrailleuses, and was five times hit whilst making the attack." For his services on this occasion he was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. 1914]: "Reginald Lennox George Marix, Flight Lieut., Royal Navy."

Reginald L. G. Marix.

After the evacuation of Antwerp he served under Commander Samson, D.S.O., R.N., in the naval armoured cars, taking part in the First Battle of Ypres. Later he was stationed at Dunkirk, and took part in the early air raids on the Belgian Coast. He was promoted Flight Commander, R.N., 1 Jan. 1915; proceeded in Feb. 1915, with his Wing, to the Dardanelles, and took part in the aerial operations during the landings at Cape Helles, Anzac and Suvla Bay; was mentioned in Despatches by the Admiral Commanding; in Oct. 1915, he returned home, and formed a Canadian squadron; was promoted to Squadron Commander, R.N., 1 Jan. 1916. In Oct. 1916, he was severely injured whilst flying in France. In 1917 was created a Chevalier of the Order of the Crown of Belgium. On 1 April, 1918, he was transferred from the Royal Naval Air Service to the Royal Air Force as Major. He is married, and has a son.

COLLET, CHARLES HERBERT, Lieut., was born 4 Feb. 1888, second son of James Francis Herbert Collet, of Milbrook, Southampton, late of the Public Works Department of the Government of India, Engineer, and his wife, Teresa, daughter of Francis and Teresa Pilley. He was educated at Elizabeth College, Guernsey, and Dulwich College, London, S.E.; joined the Royal Marine Artillery 1 Sept. 1905, and was promoted to Lieutenant 1 July, 1906, and was transferred to the Naval Wing of the Royal Flying Corps in 1915. He was regarded as one of the best naval airmen, and first attracted attention by his flying in the big biplane bought by the Admiralty from the Deutsche Flugzeug Werks of Leipzig, in 1913. Early in 1914 he had this machine equipped with a big petrol tank in place of the passenger's seat, and started from Plymouth on a non-stop flight to John o'Groats. He was brought down by engine trouble at Grimsby, but the flight stood as a British "record" for distance across country. While stationed at the Royal Naval Flying School at Eastchurch, Collet was the first officer in the Naval Air Service to loop the loop He held several trophies for boxing and shooting, and was a winner of the Navy and Marine Light-Weight Boxing Championship, and was in the final for the Army and Navy Light-Weight Championships. On the outbreak of the European War he served on the Western Front, and took part in the defence of Antwerp until the evacuation. On the 23rd Sept. 1914, British aeroplanes of the Naval Wing delivered an attack on the Zeppelin sheds at Düsseldorf. Conditions were very difficult on account of the misty weather, but Flight Lieut. Collet, flying a Sopwith tractor biplane, made a long flight, and succeeded in dropping three bombs on the Zeppelin shed, approaching within 400 feet. His machine was struck by one projectile, but he returned safely. The Director of the Air Department of the Admiralty, in a Memorandum dated 11 Oct. [London Gazette, 21 Oct. (Supplement, 23 Oct.) 1914], described the feat as "notable—gliding down from 6,000 feet, the last 1,500 in mist, he finally coming in sight of the air-ship shed, when at a height of 400 feet, and when only a quarter of a mile distant. . . . The importance of this incident lies in the fact that in the event of further bombs being dropped into Antwerp or other Belgian towns measures of reprisals can certainly be adopted, if desired, to almost any extent." For this—the pioneer exploit of its kind—Lieut. Collet was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 23 Oct. (Admiralty, 21 Oct.), 1914]: "Charles Herbert Collet, Lieut., Royal Marine Artillery, and Flight Lieut., Royal Naval Air Service." He was mentioned in Despatches by the Admiralty [London Gazette, 21 Oct. 1914], and again by F.M. Sir John French [London Gazette, 17 Feb. 1915]. He was twice brought down in France, but managed to escape. The first time he was forced to alight between the firing lines. On the second occasion his engine was damaged by shrapnel when he was over the German lines, and he had to volplane, just managing to reach the Belgian lines and coming under fire from both sides, as the Belgians mistook him for a German and seized him as a prisoner. He was gazetted Flight Commander 23 Feb. 1915; served in the Dardanelles, and took part in the landing on the Gallipoli Peninsula 25 April, 1915, and was engaged in several fights with hostile aeroplanes. He lost his life in the Eastern Mediterranean, while on patrol duty, by an accident to his aeroplane resulting from engine failure, 19 Aug. 1915. Michael Sullivan Keogh Chief Petty Officer, H.M.S. Ark Royal, was awarded the Albert Medal (2nd Class) for his gallantry in endeavouring to rescue Capt. Collet. The official record in the London Gazette of 14 Jan. 1916, is as follows: "On 19 Aug. 1915, an aeroplane, piloted by the late Capt. C. H. Collet, D.S.O., R.M.A., was ascending from Imbros aerodrome, and had reached a height of 150 feet, when the engine stopped. The machine was upset by the powerful air currents from the cliffs, and fell vertically to the ground, while the petrol carried burst into flames, which immediately enveloped the aeroplane and pilot. Chief Petty Officer Keogh, upon arriving at the scene of the accident, at once made an attempt to save Capt. Collet by dashing into the midst of the wreckage, which was a mass of flames. He had succeeded in dragging the fatally injured officer nearly clear of the flames when he himself was overcome by the burns which he had received from the blazing petrol." A General Officer with whom he served for a time on observation duty in the Dardanelles wrote of him to his father in the highest terms.

London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914.—"His Majesty the King has been graciously pleased to approve of the appointment of the undermentioned Officers to be Companions of the Distinguished Service Order, in recognition of their services with the Expeditionary Force, specified below."

WALFORD, JOHN COLQUHOUN, Capt., was born 22 May, 1882. He was gazetted to the Royal Artillery, as Second Lieutenant, 23 July, 1901; became Lieutenant 23 July, 1904; was Adjutant, R.A., 2 Jan. 1911, to 4 Oct. 1912, and was promoted to Captain 23 July, 1914. He served in the European War from 1914; was wounded; mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914]: "John Colquhoun Walford, Capt., 119th Battery, Royal Field Artillery. For gallant conduct at Eloges, on 24 Aug., where he was wounded in two places, and at Le Cateau, on 26 Aug., where, in spite of pain from his wounds, he showed a fine example in bringing limbers and teams up under a heavy fire." He became Major 9 Nov. 1915; was Brigade Major, R.A., 63rd Division, British Armies in France, 7 Oct. 1917, to 4 Nov. 1918, and Acting Lieutenant-Colonel, R.A., from 6 Nov. 1918. He married, in 1909, Honoria Cecilia, daughter of the Rev. C. W. Hunt-Holly.

Colin Arthur Jardine.

JARDINE, COLIN ARTHUR, Second Lieut., was born in Paris 24 Sept. 1892, one of the six sons of Sir John Jardine, Bart., K.C.I.E., M.P., LL.D., Indian Civil Service (retired), and Minnie, daughter of J. Hogg, M.R.C.S. He was educated at Charterhouse, and at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and joined the Army 19 July, 1912. He served in the European War; went with the 4th Division to France in Aug. 1914; was four times mentioned in Despatches, and three times wounded, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914]: "Colin Arthur Jardine, Second Lieut., Royal Field Artillery. For his fearlessness and enterprise in giving information from the firing line, both on the Aisne and on 21 Oct., when he was severely wounded." He was promoted to Lieutenant 9 June, 1915, and to Captain 8 Aug. 1916, and was Acting Major from 26 Nov. 1916. He was also awarded a Bar to the Distinguished Service Order. He was awarded the Military Cross [London Gazette, in Sept. 1916]. Capt. Jardine married, in 1919, Jean Evelyn Livesay, daughter of Major-General W. A. Liddell, C.B.

SMYTH, GERALD BRICE FERGUSON, Lieut, was born 7 Sept. 1885. He entered the Royal Engineers 29 July, 1905; became Lieutenant 3 Feb. 1908, and Captain 30 Oct. 1914. Capt. Smyth served in the European War from 1914, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914]: "Gerald Brice Ferguson Smyth, 17th Company, Royal Engineers. For consistent skill, daring and hard work in reconnaissance and defensive preparations by night and day throughout the campaign, and especially during the Battle of the Aisne and in the trenches at Givenchy, until wounded on 25 Oct. by a shell, entailing the loss of his left arm." He was given the Brevet of Major 3 June, 1916; was acting Lieutenant-Colonel, commanding a Service Battn. King's Own Scottish Borderers, 2 Dec. 1916, to 2 May, 1917, and 4 Nov. 1917, to 23 March, 1918; Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel, commanding a Service Battn. King's Own Scottish Borderers, 10 May to 2 Oct. 1918; Temporary Brigadier-General, commanding the 93rd Infantry Brigade, British Armies in France, 3 Oct. 1918. He was severely wounded; was given the Brevet of Lieutenant-Colonel 3 June, 1919; was four times mentioned in Despatches and awarded a Bar to the Distinguished Service Order.

William Percy Buckley.

BUCKLEY, WILLIAM PERCY, Lieut., was born 13 Sept. 1887; entered the Army, 1907; became Captain, 1915, and Major, 1918. He served in the European War, 1914–15; was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914]: "William Percy Buckley, Lieut., 1st Battn. The Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry. For great gallantry at Beaupuits on the night of the 18th Oct., when the enemy's fire had set alight two ricks, in endeavouring to extinguish (under a heavy fire of machine guns) the flames, which were already showing clearly to the enemy the position of the battalion's trenches."

KENTISH REGINALD JOHN, Capt., was born 20 Dec. 1876, son of George Kentish, of 12, Courtfield Gardens, London, S.W., and Caroline Kentish, of Bungay, Suffolk. He was educated at St. Albans, Malvern and Sandhurst; joined the 1st Battn. The Royal Irish Fusiliers 8 Aug. 1897. He served in the South African War from 1899–1902; was Special Service Officer for Mounted Infantry from 15 Feb. to 1 April, 1901 (Queen's Medal with four clasps, and King's Medal with two clasps). He became Lieutenant 1 Dec. 1899, and Captain 1 Aug. 1902, and was Adjutant, 1st Battn. The Royal Irish Fusiliers, from 31 Dec. 1904, to 30 Dec. 1907. Capt. Kentish was A.D.C. to the G.O.C., 2nd Division, Aldershot Command, from 1 Feb. 1910, to 31 March, 1911; Brigade Major, 6th London Infantry Brigade, from 24 Feb. 1913, to 6 Sept. 1914. He served in the European War from 1914, beginning with the rank of Captain; was present at the Battles of the Aisne, Meteren, Armentières, First Battle of Ypres, Second Battle of Ypres, the Somme, including Montauban, Longueval, Delville Wood, Guillemont, Maltzhorn and Maurepas, Cambrai, the Lys, including the defence of Givenchy, with the 55th Division, the advance in 1918, and the occupation of La Bassée; the successive crossings of the Haute Beule, Scheldt and the Dendre Rivers, and the final march to Tournai, Leuze and Brussels, all with the 55th Division, in which he commanded the 166th Infantry Brigade. He was mentioned in Despatches six times, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order (Immediate Reward) [London Gazette, 11 Nov. 1914]: "Reginald John Kentish, Capt., Royal Irish Fusiliers. On 17 Oct., near Houplines, Capt. Kentish set fire to a farm building occupied by some Germans, who had killed and wounded many of the attacking party. It was then found that some of the wounded lying close to the door were suffering from burning debris. He organized a rescue party, and himself, at a range of a few feet, tried by firing down the passage to keep down the fire of the occupants whilst the wounded were being removed." Capt. Kentish was also made an Officer of the Legion of Honour in 1917, and a Companion of St. Michael and St. George in 1918. He was Temporary Major 5 Oct. to 17 Dec. 1914; became Major 18 Dec. 1914; was Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel whilst commanding 1st Battn. East Lancashire Regt. 18 May to 24 Sept. 1915, and whilst commanding the 1st Battn. Royal Irish Fusiliers 25 Sept. to Nov. 1915; he was promoted a Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel 1 Jan. 1916, and appointed Temporary Brigadier-General 24 March, 1916, a rank he held continuously until Aug. 1919, and during which period he successively commanded the 76th Infantry Brigade in the 3rd Division, the Senior Officers' School, Aldershot, and the 166th Infantry Brigade in the 55th Division. On the 3rd June, 1919, he was promoted to the rank of Brevet Colonel for services he had rendered during the time he was at the head of the Senior Officers' School. He originated the first of the Big Army Infantry Schools, viz.: the 3rd Army School, at Flixécourt in France, of which he was Commandant. This school and the system of training evolved by Brigadier-General R. J. Kentish subsequently became the model on which was based the whole of the school and training system for the Armies in the United Kingdom and Overseas. Included in that system was the Theory, Demonstration, Practice System of Teaching, which produced the most remarkable results in the shortest possible time. Other far-reaching and urgent reforms affecting deeply the whole of the moral of the British Army were originated by this officer whilst at the head of these big training establishments, and especially when Commandant of the Senior Officers' School at Aldershot, a school which lives to-day and which has become a part of the post-war Army and on the lines he suggested. Prior to the war he originated the policy of placing the soldier on his honour, which led to the abolition of picquets in the Aldershot Command, and subsequently in the whole Army. He was also the originator of the scheme for providing adequate recreation grounds throughout every garrison and station in the United Kingdom, and, in 1913, was officially appointed by the Army Council to report on the whole question. The scheme arrived at provided every regiment with two football grounds, one cricket ground, one running track, and four tennis courts. This scheme was brought to completion in the Aldershot Command, and was in process of completion in every station in the United Kingdom when the Great War broke out. Brigadier-General Kentish has since the Armistice been again appointed to carry on the work which he originated in 1909, and is at the present moment engaged on that work, not only for the Regular Army but also for the Territorial Army which is in process of being raised. Brigadier-General R. J. Kentish has been Honorary Secretary, Army Football Association, since 1913; is on the Committee of the Army Rifle Association; on the Committee of the Army Fencing Union; a Councillor of the Football Association, and also a Member of the British Olympic Council. He is the author of many books and papers on matters affecting the training and welfare of the soldier. He is a Member of the Army and Navy Club, Pall Mall, S.W.; the Junior United Service Club, Charles Street, S.W.; the Sports Club, St. James's Square, S.W., and the National Sporting Club, Covent Garden, W.C.

Cuthbert Savile Baines.

Frederick H. Blackwood.

BLACKWOOD, FREDERICK HERBERT, Lieut., was born 9 Nov. 1885, at Stobo, Peeblesshire, N.B., son of Alexander Blackwood, Esq., and Geraldine Blackwood. He joined the Militia, 3rd Battn. Lincolnshire Regt., in Dec. 1903; joined the Lincolnshire Regt. at Tidworth, his commission being dated 23 May, 1906; was transferred to India, 1908 to 1912; to the Depôt, Lincoln, in 1913; became Lieutenant 10 May, 1911. He rejoined the 1st Battn. Lincolnshire Regt. in France, Aug. 1914, as Machine Gun Officer, until appointed Adjutant on the death of Capt. R. E. Drake. He was twice mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Frederick Herbert Blackwood, Lieut., Acting Adjutant, 1st Battn. Lincolnshire Regt. On 1 Nov. at Wytschaete, during an attack on the village, rallied and kept men in their places after every company commander had been killed or wounded, showing great gallantry and coolness under heavy fire." This attack took place at night, when two battalions of the Northumberland Fusiliers and the Lincolns respectively were ordered up to the support of the cavalry." He was invalided home and appointed Adjutant at the Depôt, Lincoln, until convalescent. He was promoted to Captain 24 Nov. 1914. He was transferred to the 13th Sudanese, Egyptian Army, in Jan. 1916, and took part in the Darfur Expedition in 1916. Capt. Blackwood was appointed Commandant of the Military School, Khartoum, 1916. His favourite pursuits are hunting and shooting. He married, 9 Feb. 1915, at St. Jude's, Southsea, Nora, younger daughter of Dr. Ponsonby Widdup (late British Guiana Government Service) and Mrs. Ponsonby Widdup, and they have a daughter, Patricia Mary, and a son, Michael Frederick Ponsonby.

He served in the European War from 1914. He was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Ralph Blewitt, Lieut., Royal Field Artillery. For gallant and skilful handling of a single gun in support of infantry on the road to Gheluvelt on 31 Oct., being all the time under heavy fire. This action was of greatest use to the infantry." He was Temporary Captain from 11 Aug. 1915, and was promoted Captain 23 July, 1916; was Acting Major, R.A., 25 Sept. 1916, to 14 Feb. 1917, and 18 Feb. to 24 March, 1918. Captain-Instructor in Gunnery, School of Instruction for R.H. and R.F.A., 11 May, 1918. Capt. Blewitt married, in 1915, Denys Beatrix, second daughter of James Henderson, of 86, Eaton Place, S.W., and they have one son.

BRABAZON, THE HONOURABLE ERNEST WILLIAM MAITLAND MOLYNEUX, Capt., was born 22 March, 1884, at The Mansion, Richmond, Surrey, son of the Earl and Countess of Meath (née Lady Jane Maitland, only surviving daughter of the 11th Earl of Lauderdale). He was educated at Dover College, and joined the Coldstream Guards, 9 Jan. 1904; was promoted Lieutenant 5 Sept. 1906, and Captain 4 April, 1912. Capt. the Hon. W. M. M. Brabazon served in the European War. He was mentioned in Field-Marshal Sir John French's Despatch [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914], and on another occasion, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "The Honourable Ernest William Maitland Molyneux Brabazon, Capt., 3rd Battn. Coldstream Guards. Has shown conspicuous efficiency in Staff duties, and in keeping a long line of front, composed of many units, where communication was often difficult. He has carried and delivered messages under fire with promptitude and despatch." He was killed in action near La Bassée on 17 June, 1915, and was buried in Cambrin Cemetery, near where he fell. Lord Cavan, commanding the Guards Brigade, wrote: "We simply loved him. I can never tell you what he was to me, not only as a Staff Officer but as a friend. He was priceless, invaluable and never wearying in his work for the Brigade." And Colonel J. R. Drummond Hay, commanding the Coldstream Guards: "By his death the Army, as well as the regiment, has lost heavily." He was keen on musketry and sport, and a good shot. His three brothers also served in the Great War: Brigadier-General Lord Ardee, C.B., C.B.E., commanded the 1st Battn. Irish Guards; and the 4th Guards Brigade, from Feb. 1918, and was wounded; Capt. the Honourable Arthur Brabazon was on special service in Egypt, and Major the Honourable Claude Brabazon, O.B.E., Irish Guards, served in the Royal Air Force. Capt. the Honourable Ernest W. M. M. Brabazon married, 29 Oct. 1912, at the Guards' Chapel, Wellington Barracks, Dorothy Mary, youngest daughter of Colonel Horace Ricardo, C.V.O.

Hon. E. W. M. M. Brabazon.

Lord Claud N. Hamilton.

HAMILTON, LORD CLAUD NIGEL, Lieut., was born 10 Nov. 1889, seventh son of the second Duke of Abercorn. He was educated at Wellington; entered the Grenadier Guards 1 Feb. 1911, and became Lieutenant 24 Aug. 1912. He served throughout the European War from 1914; was twice mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Lord Claud Nigel Hamilton, Lieut., 1st Battn. Grenadier Guards. He commanded a machine gun for five days and nights in forward trenches without relief, with great effect, under severe fire." He was A.D.C. 5 Jan. 1915, to 2 March, 1919; was promoted to Captain 3 July, 1915, and was appointed Equerry-Ordinary to the Prince of Wales 3 March, 1919. The following is taken from "The First Seven Divisions" (pages 217–218), by permission of Lord Ernest Hamilton: "While four of the Guards' battalions were . . . pushing their way through the Polygon Wood, near Reutel, the two Guards' battalions in the 20th Brigade were enacting a small drama of their own at the village of Kruseik, south of the Menin Road. Here two companies of the Scots Guards and the King's Company 1st Grenadiers had been posted in some advance trenches east of the village, in the direction of the country road running from the village of Vieux Chien to Werwick. About 8.30 at night these advance trenches were attempted by peculiarly German methods. Through the intense darkness that reigned that night, and through the torrential rain, the enemy crept up close to our lines with the aid of every device known to modern warfare. Some said they had come to surrender, others said they were the South Staffords, and others again called appealingly for Capt. Paynter, who was, in actual fact, in command of the right wing of the two Scots Guards' companies. That officer's response, however, took the form of a well-directed fire, and the friendly inquirers departed with some haste. Lord Claud Hamilton (1st Grenadiers), who was in charge of the Machine Gun Section, was also undeceived by the friendliness of the visitors, and his Maxims contributed to the haste of their departure. This officer had now been seven days and nights unrelieved in the machine-gun trenches, and the coolness and resource which he displayed during that period gained for him the D.S.O. He was relieved early on the morning following this night attack by an officer of the Scots Guards, who was killed the same day."

HANBURY-SPARROW, ARTHUR ALAN, Lieut., was born 1 April, 1892, at The Uplands, Tettenhall, near Wolverhampton, son of Alan Bertram Hanbury-Sparrow, Esq., of Hillside, Church Stettton, Salop. He was educated at Lockers Park, Hemel Hempstead, Winchester College, and the Royal Military College, Sandhurst; joined the Royal Berkshire Regt., as Second Lieutenant, 20 Sept. 1911, and became Lieutenant 4 March, 1914. He served in the European War from 1914. He was twice severely wounded; mentioned in Despatches, March, 1915, and was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Arthur Alan Hanbury-Sparrow, Lieut., 1st Battn. Princess Charlotte of Wales' Regt. (Royal Berkshire Regt.). He has done good work throughout the campaign; was severely wounded during an attack on a German position at Passchendaele-Becelaire Road, which resulted in taking the enemy's trenches and seventy prisoners." He was Temporary Captain, Royal Berkshire Regt., from 10 June to 28 July, 1915, and became Adjutant 23 July, 1915, and Captain 28 July, 1915. He was again mentioned in Despatches. From 22 March to 3 July, 1916, he was G.S.O.3; was awarded the Military Cross; became Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel, and was awarded a Bar to his D.S.O. [London Gazette, 26 Sept. 1917]: "Arthur Alan Hanbury-Sparrow, D.S.O., M.C., Acting Lieut.-Colonel, Royal Berkshire Regt."

A. A. Hanbury-Sparrow.

HANCOCK, RALPH ESCOTT, Lieut., was born at Llandaff, South Wales, 20 Dec. 1887, son of Frank Hancock, of Ford, Wiveliscombe, Somerset, and Mrs. Hancock. He was educated at Connaught House Preparatory School, Portmore, Weymouth, and at Rugby, where he played for the 1st Cricket Eleven in 1905 and 1906, and from which he passed direct into the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, in Aug. 1906. In Jan. 1908, he was gazetted to the 2nd Battn. Devonshire Regt., then stationed at Devonport. He became Lieutenant in Feb. 1911, and served with his regiment at Crete, Malta and Alexandria from 1909 to 1912. He was then at the Depôt, Exeter, for two years, and on the 30th Aug. 1914, left with a draft to reinforce the First Battalion in France. Lieutenant Hancock was killed in action on the 28th Oct. 1914. He was created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Ralph Escott Hancock, Lieut., 1st Battn. Devonshire Regt. (since killed in action). On 23 Oct. he displayed conspicuous gallantry in leaving his trench under very heavy fire and going back some sixty yards to pick up Corpl. Warwick, who had fallen whilst coming up with a party of reinforcements. Lieut. Hancock conveyed this non-commissioned officer to the cover of a haystack and then returned to his trench." He was mentioned in Sir John French's Despatch of the 14th Jan. 1915. Lieut. Hancock was a good athlete and rider. At Malta he played in the polo team that won the regimental cup, and captained the Army Polo Team v. the Navy. He played cricket and football for the county of Somerset; won the East Devon Hunt Heavy-Weight Point-to-Point in 1913 and 1914, on horses trained by himself, and was a well-known follower of the West Somerset and Devon Fox Hounds. He also won several prizes for shooting. On 17 Sept. 1913, at Milverton, Somerset, Lieut. Hancock married Mary Hamilton, younger daughter of HUGGINS, HENRY WILLIAM, Second Lieut., was born 26 Oct. 1891, son of Henry Huggins, of Leamington Spa. He was educated at Rugby and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was gazetted to the Royal Artillery 19 July, 1912. He served in the European War, 1914–18; was thrice mentio ned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Henry William Huggins, Second Lieut., R.F.A. For consistent gallantry in going forward to a cottage between the German trenches and our own, so as to be better able to direct his battery's fire. He remained there for three days under heavy rifle fire, directing with success by telephone, directing and observing fire, day after day from a very exposed position." He became Lieutenant 9 June, 1915; Captain 8 Aug. 1916, and was given the Brevet of Major 3 June, 1919.

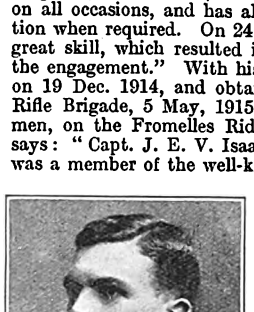
INNES-KER, LORD ALASTAIR ROBERT, Capt., was born 2 Nov. 1880, son of the 7th Duke of Roxburghe and Lady Anne Emily V. A., daughter of the 7th Duke of Marlborough. He was educated at Sandhurst, and was gazetted to the 1st Dragoons, as Second Lieutenant, 21 Feb. 1900. He served in the South African War, 1900–2 (both Medals with five clasps). He was promoted to Lieutenant 1 Jan. 1901, and became Lieutenant, Royal Horse Guards, 24 June, 1905, and Captain 10 May, 1909. Lord A. R. Innes-Ker served in the European War from 1914, as Captain, Royal Flying Corps, from 24 May, 1916, to 31 March, 1918; Temporary Major 21 Dec. 1916, to 18 Aug. 1917; Temporary Lieutenant-Colonel and Commandant, School of Military Aeronautics, Royal Flying Corps, 19 Aug. 1917, to 31 March, 1918; employed under the Air Ministry from 1 April, 1918. He was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "Lord Alastair Robert Innes-Ker, Capt., Royal Horse Guards. During a critical situation at Kruseik on Oct. 26 the regiment was sent to relieve pressure of determined attack. The operation was entirely successful. Captain Innes-Ker showed conspicuous courage with the advance squadron, bringing wounded men out of action under very heavy fire." He married Anne, daughter of the late W. L. Breese, and they have three children.

ISAAC, JOHN EDMUND VALENTINE, Capt., was born 14 Feb. 1880, at Powyke Court, Worcestershire, son of John Swinton Isaac, D.L., of Boughton Park, Worcester, Banker, and Amelia Alicia Anne, daughter of Major-General R. H. Crofton, Royal Artillery. He was educated at Wixenford and Harrow, and was gazetted to the 5th Northumberland Fusiliers at York 9 May, 1900. He joined his regiment in South Africa, on active service, leaving England on 28 June, 1900. He was dangerously wounded at Nooitgedacht (General Clements' action on the Mahaliesburg 13 Dec. 1900); and, after two years' sick leave, went back to duty. He had been gazetted Lieutenant 28 Nov. 1900, and became Captain 1 April, 1905. On the disbandment of his battalion he was gazetted to the Rifle Brigade 24 June, 1908, and subsequently served in Malta and Egypt. In the autumn of 1911 he sent in his papers, and went to Vancouver, British Columbia. On rumours of war he at once returned to England, and joined the Rifle Brigade, Reserve of Officers, 1 Sept. 1914. Capt. J. E. V. Isaac was appointed A.D.C. to Major-General Sir Thompson Capper, Commanding the 7th Division, and went to Flanders on his Staff in Oct. 1914. He was present at the First Battle of Ypres, where he was badly wounded in the left arm. For his services at that time he was mentioned in Despatches, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "John Edmund Valentine Isaac, Capt., Reserve of Officers, The Rifle Brigade (The Prince Consort's Own). He has shown conspicuous gallantry on all occasions, and has always obtained reliable and valuable information when required. On 24 Oct. he guided a unit to a critical point with great skill, which resulted in checking the enemy. He was wounded in the engagement." With his arm still rather useless, he returned to duty on 19 Dec. 1914, and obtained leave to rejoin his regiment, 2nd Battn. Rifle Brigade, 5 May, 1915. Four days later he was killed, leading his men, on the Fromelles Ridge. The "Athletic News" of 6 Sept. 1915, says: "Capt. J. E. V. Isaac (Rifle Brigade), unofficially reported killed, was a member of the well-known Worcestershire cricketing family. Since 1903 he had been a member of the M.C.C. In Nov. last he received the D.S.O." Capt. Isaac was a good cricketer; played for his county and his regiment. He was a member of I Zingari and the Free Foresters' Club. He won the Cairo Grand National in 1911, while with his regiment in Egypt. He was a keen huntsman and hunted with the Worcestershire, Pytchley, York and Ainsty, etc., etc.

John Edmund V. Isaac.



John Peake Knight.

KNIGHT, JOHN PEAKE, Lieut., was born 3 Aug. 1890, at Brighton, eldest son of James Percy Knight, of Sundridge Park, Bromley, Kent, and Ellen Knight; and grandson of the late Mr. J. P. Knight, for many years General Manager of the London, Brighton and South Coast Railway. He entered the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, in Sept. 1909, and was gazetted to the Royal Field Artillery on 23 Dec. 1910, and was stationed at Exeter and Brighton. He received his jacket as Subaltern; went to France with the 2nd Division 18 Aug. 1914, and was in the following battles: Mons, the Retreat, the Marne, the Aisne, First Battle of Ypres, Neuve Chapelle, Festubert, Loos and Vermelles, and the First Battle of the Somme. He was mentioned in Despatches, 19 Oct. 1914, and created a Companion of the Distinguished Service Order [London Gazette, 1 Dec. 1914]: "John Peake Knight, Lieut., Royal Field Artillery. For conspicuous and consistent gallantry in assisting infantry, especially on 10 Nov. Has shown himself full of enterprise and initiative. His work has much encouraged the infantry." King George gave him his D.S.O. on 3 Dec. 1914, at Hazebroucke Station. He was again mentioned in Despatches 17 Feb. 1915; promoted to Captain in Oct. 1915. After having fought with distinction in the Great War, Capt. J. Peake Knight was killed in action whilst commanding the 35th Battery, Royal Field Artillery, during the First Battle of the Somme, 31 Aug. 1916. On 21 Nov. 1914, at St. John's, Bromley, Kent, he had married Phyllis Olivia Knight, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gray-Knight, of Brighton, and they had one daughter, Anne Peake Knight.
